P R E F A C E.

THE use of a Universal Gazetteer, to those who feel any interest at all in what is going on in the world at large, is too obvious to need pointing out. Its name seems to imply, that it is the companion, or accompaniment of the newspaper, or gazette, which latter name was derived from the gazetta, a small coin of Venice, the original price of these periodical chronicles in that commercial republic.

A work of this kind, necessarily formed of materials brought from every quarter of the world, at uncertain and different periods, and, generally by we know not whom, is peculiarly liable to errors, and the compiler must confine himself within very narrow bounds, indeed, if he do not submit to these imperfections.

In the compilation of this work, the latest and most authentic accounts have been consulted; from travelling, the author has been enabled to correct several errors, and from correspondents he has received descriptions of some places, which are certainly the best and most accurate that have been yet offered to the public in this way.

Towns and places of note are described at length, or form distinct paragraphs; the names of these are given in capitals. Those to which an asterisk, or star, is prefixed, are the post towns of Great Britain and Ireland. Even villages, hamlets, and single houses, in these islands, have been mentioned, and, in some instances, their situations pretty precisely told; but these, as inferior articles, are given in a different character, or letter, and do not form different paragraphs, but are carried on in continuity, generally forming only distinct periods. The expressions of inferior and considerable, or of note, are meant not in reference to wealth but to population. If errors occur in the places of less note, which they probably may, or, indeed, necessarily must, (for, in attempting to make this the completest geographical index extant, works of more dubious authority have also been consulted) it may be well enough to caution the reader to suspend his analogical conclusions, "that if a place, which he knows, be inaccurately described, he may reasonably suppose that others are also incorrect, and that places more remote, or distant, must necessarily be more false." It will only, in such case, be the part of candour to consider, that such places are, perhaps, but little visited by travellers, and scarcely known beyond their own vicinity; and that if he, or some of his liberal-minded neighbours, do not communicate better information to the compiler, the error is likely to be continued.

And here the author hopes it will not be thought improper, if he takes the liberty to suggest to men of leisure and information, whether they may not apply a few moments of their time, in a way satisfactory to themselves, and useful to the public, in communicating to the gazetteer-makers topographical information. If such will have the kindness to contribute to this work, their communications will be gratefully received; here also he may acknowledge to have received from several of his friends, and even from strangers, of this description, both of the established religion and dissenters, very liberal encouragement in the prosecution of this work. But the present is a production which it does not require erudition to find fault with or amend. There is scarcely any individual but may suggest improvements, or give useful information, on some place which he knows: and every reader, from the school-boy to the man in years, who shall communicate amendments, will confer an obligation on the author.

All who may have the liberality thus to yield assistance to the work, are requested particularly to give information on such subjects as the following, or as an answer to any of these queries:—What is the place?—What its name?—In what district situated?—How many houses or people?—What the soil?—What the appearance of the surrounding country?—By what production or manufacture are they enabled to support themselves, pay taxes, &c.?—What curiosities have they or had they, natural or artificial?—What particular customs?—What public establishments of Infirmarys, Hospitals, Schools, Libraries, &c.?—What the situation of the place?—On hill or in vale; on what road or highway; or on what river, bay, creek, or sea?—And what are its distance and bearings from other places, &c.?—What places already mentioned in this work are so insignificant, that they ought to be omitted?—And which are so important that they ought to form distinct paragraphs?

It may be necessary here to notice the improvements introduced into all parts of the present edition, as the proprietors encouraged by the flattering reception with which the first edition was favoured, have spared no exertion or expence to render this extensive Gazetteer still more worthy of the public patronage.

In the execution of this task, and in order to render the following sheets as complete as the nature of the work will admit, the attention of the publishers has been particularly directed to the inserting such omissions, and correcting such errors, as must have unavoidably escaped the author, in compiling so laborious a work.

In the first edition, no notice was taken of a subject affording much useful and necessary information, although a heavy national calamity, viz. War; nor of the facts and circumstances relating to it; military and naval establishments, fortifications, battles, sieges, and other remarkable operations and events, by which the most important changes are produced in the political state of nations.

In the description of a considerable number of the principal empires and countries, the usual division of the regions (in common with all our competitors) was erroneous; the geographical position, bearings, distances, &c. of places, were not laid down with uniform accuracy; nor was the least attention paid to the markets and principal fairs in the several counties of England and Wales. Many mistakes have also arisen from the same words occurring frequently in various parts, with different spellings, &c. &c. all which deficiencies and inaccuracies have, in this edition, been duly attended to and remedied: the whole of this Gazetteer having been lately revised and corrected at a very great expence, and with unremitting attention and assiduity.

Some considerable improvements have likewise been introduced, by adding to the composition of this work, a number of remarkable and important places omitted in the late edition. The reader may also find much new and interesting information in the numerous additions occasionally made to places already noticed, several of which will be found to be considerably improved, if not written entirely new; notwithstanding which, the work, although considerably augmented in valuable and authentic nomenclature, is yet not enlarged in size and price.

The insertions made, include different topics of designation and description, but chiefly relate to the curiosities of nature and art, natural productions, forms of government, military and naval affairs, inland navigations, manufactures, magnificent public buildings, and the remains of remarkable antiquities; with several original communications addressed to the editor, pointing out sources of information and improvement, not often to be met with.

These additions the editor has been enabled to make, by omitting the latitudes and longitudes of places apparently insignificant, or whose situations may be easily ascertained by a reference to other places generally known; by reducing and narrowing some accounts rather too circumstantial and minute, for an abridgment; and by expunging several articles of less essential importance, which, though not unworthy of attention, leave little room for others that, on further consideration, appear to be more useful and interesting.

The editor, however, in stating the progressive improvements by which he has added to the stock of knowledge contained in our Geographical Dictionaries, does not thereby mean to assert, that he has so fully executed his plan, but that he himself can discover some faults and imperfections both in the work and its execution. Much has been done, yet much remains undone, to improve and bring to perfection the arduous task of compiling Gazetteers and Dictionaries. It is only by slow degrees, and long and persevering exertions, continued through several centuries, that this comprehensive subject can be expected to arrive at extensive usefulness; but, from the mutability of things, it can never be finally brought to a state of full perfection.

The publishers, however, not presuming to suggest that they have completely succeeded in the execution of this undertaking, yet relying on the candid decision of a discerning public, hope, with some confidence, that the performance, now respectfully submitted to their notice, will be found amusing and entertaining, as well as useful and instructive to the GENERALITY OF READERS; and they trust it may claim the peculiar attention of the YOUNG, and SUCH AS ARE NOT ABLE TO PROCURE LARGER WORKS; for the use, indeed, of whom it is principally designed and calculated. The reader, whether scientific or less informed, will be candid enough, it is presumed, to excuse small mistakes, for the sake of the pleasure, satisfaction, and information, which it is natural to suppose, the highly interesting objects contained in the science here treated of, will afford to his mind.

THE compiler of this work is unwilling to dismiss it, without mentioning a practice which he used to adopt, as a geographical exercise for his scholars, when engaged in that pleasing task, the tuition of youth, hoping that, if parents and teachers will but try it, the scholars and children may derive from it a pleasing and useful amusement. The method was, to propose an imaginary journey; suppose from Dublin to Paris, to Rome, to Constantinople, to Jerusalem, to Delhi, to Pekin, or to any other place; or an imaginary voyage, direct or circuitous, or round the world, or long or short. In the first instance, from Dublin to Paris, it was proposed to the lower classes to describe the easiest course: these chose, perhaps, that by water, from the mouth of the Liffey, southward through the Irish Channel, round the Land's End, by the Isles of Scilly, and eastward through the English Channel, to Havre de Grace, at the mouth of the Seine; and thence, up the river, to the capital. Others adopted a western circuitous course, through the south of Ireland, and across the sea to Nantz, or Bourdeaux, on their way to Paris. Some took the post road, or a devious way, through Wales and England, to Dover and Calais; and others, perhaps, chose a route through the north of Ireland, Scotland, across the German Ocean, and through some of the continental countries of Europe, in a SW. direction, to Paris. In all these instances, they planned out their route by the maps, and related, in form of a letter, what they thought the most entertaining in the descriptions of the places along the way, which they found in the Gazetteer.

Though Geography be one of the most plain and simple sciences, being much easier learnt than reading and writing, there are some parents who declare they know very little of the subject; to these the following remark may be acceptable, as it may enable them to lead their children on, as above-mentioned, in imaginary journeys, or tours, round the earth, till they obtain, in this familiar way, a tolerable acquaintance with the different parts of our globe.

To conceive aright of the world, being represented in two circles on the map, they are to observe, that each of them represents a hemisphere, or opposite half of the globe: if these circles were put back to back, fastened at the edges all round, and swelled up like a blown bladder, into a spherical form, it would give a representation of our earth; when, therefore, in marking any line on either of these circles, we get off at one edge, we are immediately on the corresponding part of the other, and so, on it, may pursue, or continue our track or way. Hence it will appear, that in describing a track round the whole earth, or globe, on the map, we must necessarily cross both the circles.

TO THE

THIRD EDITION.

THE intelligent reader will readily discern, that the preceding Preface is partly compiled from the materials furnished by Dr. Walker in the first edition; and that it was judged necessary to add a few observations, explaining such further particulars, of correction and improvement, as had been introduced into the second.

In that edition, many mistakes were rectified, and the insertions made were so very numerous and important, as greatly to add to the reputation and value of the work; indeed, the reception it has met with has been so favourable, and the consequent demand for it so uncommon, that the Editor can announce, with peculiar satisfaction, the rapid sale of a very large impression, within the space of two years.

This Preface is still retained, to enable the reader to survey the origin and progress of the undertaking, and to enter more readily into the merits of the different editions; but in a work which has already given such great satisfaction to the public, and which, it may be fairly presumed, will become more and more popular, in proportion to the additional advantages which every new edition will possess: it appears, in like manner, necessary to enter into a somewhat wider field of preliminary observation and remark, to retouch some essential parts of the former Preface, which require further explanation, to sketch out a more correct idea of the plan, and to state more fully the many advantages which this edition possesses, so as fully to justify its claim to superiority.

The most conspicuous feature in the character of this new and improved compilation, is the attempt to correct mistakes, and supply many considerable deficiencies, in the alphabetical register and notice of the several counties, hundreds, towns, villages, &c. of England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland. This has been done, partly, by consulting the large maps, actual surveys, &c. and partly by selecting many important and entertaining articles from a multiplicity of publications, which have appeared, of late years, on different counties, towns, and other particular subjects of topographical description. The economical writings of Sir John Sinclair afford a rich variety of geographical matter, illustrative of places in Scotland, which have been hitherto wholly passed over, or but slightly noticed, and which have been much and long wanted. In availing himself of many of these, the Editor has diligently employed himself; thus endeavouring to improve on the original design of this performance, (which was to introduce a COMPLETE VILLARE BRITANNICUM into the aggregate of the work), a plan for which the public are, and will remain greatly indebted to the former Editor, the learned and laborious Dr. Walker. This publication, likewise, contains some new and authentic accounts, collected with a view to supply deficiencies in respect to particular parts of Ireland, in the statistical and geographical history of which country, it is to be regretted, that we are still extremely defective.

This was the first plan ever attempted, to comprise so very complete and circumstantial a View of BRITISH and IRISH GEOGRAPHY, in a work that otherwise professed to embrace all the various advantages and excellencies to be found in GENERAL GAZETTEERS; and, in this respect, Dr. Walker may be said to have produced a work unique in its kind. Having filled up the outline, which he had taken, and, in many respects, accomplished his original design, (although, as a first attempt, it was, as might be expected, extremely imperfect and defective in the execution) it was evident that, when announced to the world, a manual so much wanted only required to be known, to meet with general approbation; and, accordingly, on its first appearance, its merit and usefulness were immediately and universally acknowledged. Though still confessedly short of its attainable perfection, yet from the successful efforts of the Editor, the work may be considered as having advanced to a very desirable point of accuracy and fulness; and it is material that the public should be made fully acquainted with a fact not generally known, that no other universal Gazetteer, if examined, will be found so well adapted to communicate information relative to the present state of the British Islands, as Dr. Walker's.

Although a publication like the present will certainly prove of great utility to all kinds of readers, as must be obvious at the first inspection, to every intelligent person, yet the Editor thinks it not improper to mention a few particular classes, or sorts of readers, whom he has had immediately in view, and for the use of whom it is more particularly adapted, he having studied throughout, to incorporate into the work, complete and satisfactory information on every point of enquiry, which may be deemed necessary to be known by persons of those descriptions.

He begs leave, therefore, to recommend it to the special attention of YOUTH, whether in a course of study at school or otherwise; for the use, indeed, of whom it must appear, at first view, more immediately calculated, and to whom it will prove very serviceable in a double respect, as answering the purpose of satisfactory reference on all points of enquiry immediately connected with subjects of topographical nomenclature; and as tending to facilitate the knowledge of the maps, charts, and of the terrestrial globe.

No part of education conduces more to FORM the CHARACTER of YOUTH—no kind of instruction tends more effectually to develop the latent faculties—to excite a laudable emulation—to elevate the mind—and inspire noble, magnanimous ideas, than that which is derived from a COMPETENT KNOWLEDGE of HISTORY. In proportion as the student advances to perfection, approaches to excellence, in the acquirement of this sort of knowledge, he is enabled, with more energy and freedom, TO THINK AND JUDGE FOR HIMSELF.

The Editor, at least, who has been long engaged in the tuition of youth, is of this opinion; nor does he ever recollect to have met with a pupil, earnestly desirous of obtaining the reputation of a scholar, to whom historical and political researches were not peculiarly acceptable and grateful.

But

But even a knowledge of history, though in some measure, the groundwork of all elegant and rational study, would be comparatively dull and insipid, or, at least, lose much of its value, without its great and essential auxiliary—a thorough acquaintance with geography. Indeed, the latter may be not improperly considered as a useful key to, and necessary appendage of the former; and they should ever go hand in hand.

It is likely, also, to be of very considerable service to COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS, to whom the Editor begs leave to suggest, that they have here an opportunity of being provided with an elegant and useful Vade Mecum; and to whom it will be found more peculiarly desirable and convenient, from the insertion of the Post Towns, Market Days, principal Fairs, &c. (omitted, either wholly or in part, in other works of this kind) and from the very considerable materials relative to the present state of manufactures, the useful arts, commerce, shipping, produce, &c. of the different places described, which the Editor has carefully collected, for the sole purpose of enriching this work.

The Editor also begs leave earnestly to recommend it as a suitable companion for CAPTAINS OF SHIPS, and OTHER PERSONS EMBARKING on a SEA VOYAGE, who will meet with much useful instruction in it, on a great variety of subjects more or less connected with navigation, and to whom it will even furnish amusement in the cabin, in the cessation of more important duties. It is attended with this further advantage, that, considering the vast mass of information which it conveys, in the additional quantity of letter-press, from its compact form, and crowded page, it is, comparatively speaking, extremely portable, and will occupy very little room in the portmanteau or sea-chest.

Nor can he entertain a doubt, that it will be highly acceptable to GENTLEMEN TOURISTS, who travel partly for amusement, and partly for the further polishing and improvement of a classical education. The tour of Europe has long been thought requisite to adorn and accomplish the character of a gentleman—to finish his studies—to expand his ideas—and enable him to surmount national prejudices. Indeed, for some years past, excursions to the Lakes of Cumberland, and other more distant parts of the United Kingdom, have become very frequent; and thus the curious, the literati, and the fashionable, as if eager to atone for the reproach of former inattention, have appeared anxious to do justice to the beautiful scenes of nature in our own country. On such occasions it is of great importance, and must afford considerable pleasure to the Tourist, to have an unassuming, acceptable COMPANION in the POST-CHAISE, that can fully acquaint him with all the material incidents respecting a place, which had either wholly slipped from his memory, or the reading of which he had, perhaps, more shamefully neglected.

He likewise hopes that it will prove extremely acceptable to REAL ANTIQUARIANS, who will find it of use, on numerous occasions, to consult a publication like the present; many of the descriptions contained in it being very curious of themselves, well worthy of attention, tion, and calculated to gratify the taste of all who make objects of this nature their study or amusement.

In this enlightened age, POLITICS will necessarily become an interesting and important topic of conversation; and it is impossible for any person even to run over a newspaper to the satisfaction of himself and others; without having made some previous improvement in pursuits intimately connected with it. Indeed, a knowledge of geography may be not improperly considered as the indispensable passport into all genteel company; and nothing can place any man, who is raised a few degrees above the vulgar, in a more contemptible point of view, than to betray a total ignorance of subjects relating to it.

This compilation will also be found very proper to be used as a suitable introduction to larger works, and it has, in this respect, the recommendation of being extremely well fitted for the use and benefit of private learners. The more advanced student will also find, that a considerable portion of useful description has been introduced into the work, to render it more particular and satisfactory, and certainly superior, as a COPIOUS ABSTRACT, to most, if not all, of its predecessors on the same subject. It will likewise, it is presumed, improve and do great service to even the highest class of readers, who will find, in this new edition, very large alterations and improvements, including a great number of original articles, well worthy of their diligent perusal.

But the Editor trusts that it will not only be found useful as a comprehensive DICTIONARY to refer to, but likewise valuable as a work of general entertainment to private families as well as individuals, particularly to such readers as have neither time, means, nor inclination, to search for information in larger works; and even such as are supposed to be unlettered, those, at least, who have not had the benefit of a very liberal education, (of whom there is a large proportion both in town and country), will derive singular advantages, from having in their possession a repository of geographical knowledge, like the present, abounding with such a rich variety of novel and authentic matter.

Fully convinced of its superior excellence and utility, the Editor does not hesitate, in its present improved state, to rest its merits with the public, on a candid perusal and examination. Having succeeded nearly to the utmost of his wishes, in his studious endeavours to enhance the value of this performance, (although it is not meant to be offered as elaborate or perfect), and to render it as complete as can possibly be expected, consistently with the design of an abridgment, he indulges the hope, that it will be found sufficiently interesting and instructive to recommend itself. A plain, popular, and agreeable work, concerted on so judicious a plan, and executed on so ample and correct a scale, so much exceeding the former editions in quantity, and so superior in its materials, can scarcely fail to obtain a degree of public approbation strongly marked, and a sale and circulation, in some measure, adequate to, and commensurate with its real importance and use.

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

LAND AND WATER.

A CONTINENT is a large tract of land not separated by the sea; as Europe, Asia, &c. An ocean is a vast collection of water not separated by land; as the Atlantic, Pacific, &c. A sea is a smaller collection of water, communicating with the ocean; as the Mediterranean, the Baltic.

An island is a tract of land surrounded by water; as Great Britain, Ireland, &c. A lake is water surrounded by land; as the lake of Geneva.

A cape, or promontory, is a projection or point of land running far into the sea; as the Cape of Good Hope.

A peninsula is land almost surrounded with water; as the Morea. A gulf is a part of the sea almost surrounded with land; as the Gulf of Persia.

An Isthmus is the narrow part of land which joins a peninsula to a continent, or larger country; as the Isthmus of Suez. A strait is a narrow channel which affords a passage from one sea to another; as the Straits of Gibraltar.

DEFINITIONS OF CIRCLES, &c.

Astronomers have considered the starry heavens as a sphere, with our earth in the centre: this is the appearance they make to our senses. They have divided the celestial and terrestrial spheres, by great and less circles; great circles are those which divide the sphere equally; less circles are those which divide it unequally.

Great Circles.

The Ecliptic.
The Equator.
Circles of Longitude and Meridian.
The Horizons.
Azimuths.

Less Circles.

Parallels of Latitude and Declination.
Tropics.
Polar Circles.
Almicanters, or Parallels of Altitude.

To imagine that the Earth stands still, and that the sun rises and falls, is a false idea, however consonant to the perception of our senses, and as romantic as the notion that houses, trees, &c. upon land are moving past us, when we sail in a vessel along the shore.

While our earth annually performs an orbit round the sun, the latter appears to describe a circle in the heavens, and we seem to stand still; this circle is called the ecliptic. The zodiac is the same imaginary kind of circle, but extended to a considerable breadth on each side of the ecliptic, including the paths of all the planets.

The ancients divide the Zodiac into 12 parts, and imagined or contrived certain signs in each division. Their names and characters are as follow:

Northern Signs.

♈ Aries.
♊ Gemini.
♋ Cancer.
♍ Virgo.

Southern Signs.

♎ Libra.
♑ Capricornus.
♒ Aquarius.
♓ Pisces.

The equator divides the sphere into the northern and southern hemispheres. The latitude of a place upon earth, and the declination of a heavenly object, as a star or planet, are their distances from the equator. The tropics are parallels of latitude or declination, near $23\frac{1}{2}$ degrees from the equator: the tropics bound the ecliptic in the heavens, and on earth, the torrid zone. The polar circles are the same distance from the poles as the tropics are from the equator. On earth, the temperate zones lie between the polar circles and tropics, the frigid zones lie within the polar circles.

Meridians are indefinite in number; their planes intersect that of the equator at right angles.

The longitude of a place upon earth, and the right ascension of a heavenly object, are their distances from a certain meridian. Circles of longitude in the heavens are indefinite in number; their planes intersect that of the ecliptic at right angles. The latitude of any heavenly object is its distance from the ecliptic; the longitude its distance from that circle of longitude, which passes through the first point of Aries.

The horizon is that circle which bounds our sight, or it is the termination of what is visible to us of the sky, when on the sea, or an extensive level plane.

SOLAR SYSTEM.

The names and characters by which astronomers express the planets are as follow, in order from the sun:

Mercury. Venus. Earth. Mars. Jupiter. Saturn. Herschel.

The planets are attracted by the sun, and would be drawn into it, and consumed, were it not for an impulse they have received, which tends to throw them off in a right line; by the combination of these two forces, (the centripetal, or centre-seeking, and the centrifugal, or centre-fleeing) they are preserved in their orbits.

The three outer planets have each of them several satellites, or moons, accompanying them. The comets of our system are supposed to be 21 in number, they are found to be under the same laws with the planets, but their orbits are very eccentric.

§ An idea of a place, or its situation, may sometimes be formed from its name. In England, borough, bury, berry, burgh, or brough, as also caster, chester, ceaster, and chaster, at the end of the name of a place, show it to have been a town or fortified place. Chip, cheap, chipping, in the names of places, implies a market; combe, a valley between two hills: and comb in the end, or comp in the beginning of names, a low situation. Minster, is a contraction of monastery. Mouth, expresses the situation where a river falls into the sea, or other water; and ness, a promontory which runs into the water in a form resembling a nose. Thorp, throp, threp, trep, and trop, all signify a village; and wold, whether singly or jointly, signifies a plain open country, or hills without a wood.

In Ireland, ard signifies high; ath, water; bally, a town; and clon, a retirement. Dun and rath imply a fort. Innis, signifies an island; kil, a church; knock, a hill; lis, an inclosure; lough, a lake; and magh, a field.

UNIVERSAL GAZETTEER.

A A K

A A, three large rivers, one in Courland, which runs into the bay of Riga; one of Artois which rises however in Picardy, and passes by St. Omer and Gravelines, below which it falls into the English Channel; and one in Westphalia, which rises near Munster, waters that city, and afterwards falls into the river Embs: also several other smaller rivers of France, Germany, Flanders, Switzerland, and the United Provinces. Aa in the Danish language, Ea in the Saxon, and Eau in the French, signify water.

AACH, a small town of Nellenburgh, in Suabia, near a river of the same name, which falls into the Lake of Zell. It is subject to Austria, and seated on an eminence between the Danube and the Lake of Constance. Lat. 47. 45. N. lon. 9. 0. E.

AAGGH DOGGIT, a mountain of Amasia, in Turkey, on the frontiers of Persia, over which the caravans pass, in their journey between Constantinople and Ispahan.

AAG HOLM, a small island on the coast of Norway. Lat. 58. N.

AUHUS, a small town, in a county of the same name, in Munster, Westphalia, situated near the source of the Aa. Lat. 48. 13. N. lon. 7. 22. E.

AAIN CHARIN, a village near Jerusalem, said to be the place where Zacharias lived, and much frequented by pilgrims. Near it there is a convent, a large elegant building, with a handsome cupola, under which is a remarkably fine mosaic pavement: the altar, which is a very splendid one, encompassed with marble steps, is said to be built on the very spot where John the Baptist was born.

AAKIAE, a district of N. Jutland.

A A R

AAKIRKE, a town in the island of Bornholm; the seat of the civil court and synod.

AALBERG, or AALBURG, the most northern bishopric in Jutland; has for its capital, AALBORG, (that is, eel-town, from the number of eels taken there) an old, large and populous city, and next to Copenhagen, the richest and best in Denmark. It has an exchange, and a harbour deep and secure, but rather dangerous in the entrance. It carries on a considerable trade in herrings and corn, and has a manufactory of saddles, gloves, guns, pistols, &c. Lat. 57. 18. N. lon. 10. 16. E.

AALAST, or AELST. See ALOST.

AALEN. See AULEN.

AALHEIDE, a large heath in Jutland.

AAMA, a province of Barbary, 15 days journey from Tunis. The entrance to it is very dangerous, being very long and narrow, among quicksands and rivers, so covered with dust, that they appear like one continued plain.

AAN SIRE, a small island of Norway.

AAR, two large rivers in Germany and Switzerland, the former of which rises in Blankenheim, Westphalia, and falls into the Rhine opposite Lintz, in Cologne: the latter rises near the source of the Rhine, and after passing through the Lakes of Brienz and Thun, falls into the Rhine near Zursach, in Baden: and an island in the Baltic, for which last see ARROE.

AARASSO, an ancient city of Asia Minor, mentioned by Strabo, but at present only a village.

AARAW, a town and bailiwick in Bern, where the diets of the protestant cantons are held. In these assemblies, the deputies and their servants, being all citizens, dine in the same hall. It is situated on the river Aar, and contains about 1700 souls. The principal manufactures are cotton, printed linens, cutlery, and tanning. Lat. 47. 20. N. lon. 8. 10. E.

AARBERG, or AARBURG. See ARBERG.

AARDALSWERK, or SEMDALSWERK, a copper-work, now disused, in the parish of Leyrdal, in Norway.

AARHUUS, a diocese of N. Jutland, erected in the year 950. It contains 308 parishes, besides the capital.

It is formed of the Old and New towns; the former, which is about a mile N. of the New, is situated on the Don, over which there is a lofty Gothic bridge of one arch, resting at each extremity on two rocks; the latter is on the Dee, over which there is a bridge of seven arches. There is good anchorage in the bay, a harbour in each river, and salmon in all. The situation is hilly; it has a spa and baths. It's university, consisting of King's College in the Old Town, and Marischal College in the New, has produced many learned men. The manufactures are stockings, cottons, thread, &c. which they export, together with excellent salmon, oat-meal, and pickled pork, &c.; besides the coasting trade, vessels are sent hence to France, Spain, Portugal, and the northern states of Europe; the inhabitants, including the Old Town, are estimated at 25,000. A strong pier, forming an excellent harbour for vessels of moderate size, was erected here some years ago, under the direction of Mr. Smeaton, on the N. side of the harbour of New Aberdeen. This pier is 1200 feet in length, and gradually increases in thickness and height as it approaches to the sea, where the head, or rounding, is 60 feet in diameter at the base, and the perpendicular elevation is 38 feet. To the S. of the bar, they have now a depth of 17 fathoms at low water; and at the harbour mouth from 8 to 9 fathom, where they had formerly but a few feet. The whole is built of granite, the most durable stone known; and many of the outside stones are above three tons in weight, with hewn beds. Aberdeen is 84 miles NE. of Edinburgh. Lat. 57. 6. ABYSSINIA, called also HIGHER ETHIOPIA, and by the Arabians, ALHABASH, a very ancient kingdom or empire in Africa. It is bounded on the N. by Nubia on the E. by the Red Sea and Adel, on the S. and W. by Ajan, Alaba, Gingirow, and Goram; lies between 6 and 20 degrees N. lat. and between 26 and 44. E. lon. It is about 900 miles long and 800 broad, and contains 378,000 square miles. The mountains are very high here and scattered all over the country: in some parts they are so steep, that the inhabitants ascend them by ladders, and draw up the cattle with ropes; among these the Nile and the Niger have their source; and here, as in Egypt, they have their periodical inundations, which greatly fertilize the plains. The thunder and lightning here are sometimes tremendous, and the winds no less dreadful, overturning the houses and and tearing up trees by the roots; and the rain comes down like torrents. Their rainy season holds for near six months, during our summer months, and is succeeded by an equal period of cloudless sky. Gold, silver, and copper are found here, in their mines; the vegetables are various; the animals are the lion, leopard, elephant, rhinoceros, dromedary, camel, stag, horse, cow, goat, sheep, monkeys, &c.; with a great variety of birds, as the ostrich, eagles, vultures, storks, &c.; and in the rivers there are found the crocodile and hippopotamus. The complexions of the inhabitants are copper-coloured, olive, and black; their religion seems to be a mixture of Judaism and the profession of the Greek church; their language is the Ethiopic, which bears a great affinity to the Arabic.

ACRA, ACRE, or ST. JEAN D'ACRE, a sea port of Palestine, called in scripture Accho, and by the Greeks Ptolemais; it underwent, in the time of the crusades, many sieges, as well by the Christians as Saracens; and lately, it has successfully sustained a memorable siege, under the French general Bonaparte. The fortifications, however, whatever they were in former times, consist, at present, of only a few low towers, mounted with rusty cannon towards the sea; and on the land side, of a wretched garden wall, without any ditch. The bay, or harbour, which extends, in a semicircle of 3 leagues, as far as Mount Carmel, is open to the NW. winds; yet the port is reckoned one of the best, and the town is one of the principal ones, upon this dreary coast. It was here that our king Edward I. when prince, receiving a wound from a poisoned arrow, was cured by his wife Eleanor, who sucked out the poison. The Armenians and European merchants have their respective places of worship here, and carry on a pretty profitable trade with the Arabs. It is 28 miles S. of Tyre. Lat. 32. 30. N. lon. 35. 24. E.

Acton, Aſmagh.

Acton, Kent, in Charing. Acton, Staff.

Acton Beauchamp, 10 miles from Worcester. Acton Burnell, Shropf. 8 miles from Shrewsbury; so named from the Burnells, who formerly had a castle in it. A parliament was held here in the reign of king Edward I. wherein a statute, called the Statute Merchant, was made for the assurance of debts. The lords sat in the castle, and the commons in a barn, which is yet standing. A great part also of the castle, a very magnificent structure, still remains, it's walls being exceedingly strong, and adorned with fine battlements, and rows of windows curiously carved. The building is square, and it is supposed to have suffered less, from the injury of time, than any other of the kind in England.

Acton, East, 6 miles; Acton West, 7 miles from London, both in Middlesex, on or near the road to Uxbridge. At the distance of about half a mile from E. Acton are 3 wells, that afford a purging water, noted for the pungency of it's salt. These wells, about the middle of the present century, were in the highest repute for their medicinal virtues; the assembly room was then a place of very fashionable resort, and the neighbouring hamlets of E. Acton and Fryar's-Place were filled with persons of all ranks, who came to reside there, in the months of May, June, and July. But fashion and novelty having given the preference to other wells, these have, long ago, lost their celebrity; and the assembly room, nearly in ruins, has been lately repaired and converted into tenements. Acton Grange, Cheshire, near the Mersey. Acton, Cheshire, near Northwich. Acton, Cheshire, near Nantwich. Acton, Cumb. 8 miles from Carlisle. Acton, near Northampton. Acton, Shropf. near Purflow. Acton, Staff. between the Trent and Severn. Acton Higher, Glouc. near Wotton. Acton-Pigot, Acton-Reynold, and Acton-Scot, or on the Hill, Shropf. Acton Ilger, Gloucest. hamlet to Iron Acton. Acton-Truffel, Staff. Acton-Turville, Glouc.

AFRICA, one of the four grand divisions of the globe, is bounded on the N. by the Mediterranean, which separates it from Europe; on the NE. by the Red Sea, which separates it from Asia, save where they are connected together by the isthmus of Suez; it's other shores are washed by the Ocean. The greatest part of this largest of all peninsulas, lies within the torrid zone, hence the inhabitants are all of dark complexions; and in the centre and southwards they are quite black. The mountains and rivers of Africa are very large; the country is extremely fertile except in those extensive tracts that are unsupplied with moisture; there the country is parched up, and the heat becomes insupportable. In crossing these arid deserts, the sands are sometimes so raised by the winds, that whole caravans are buried under them: on the other hand, nothing can be more beautiful than the fertile parts of Africa; the luxuriancy of the landscape, continually clothed with all the beauties of spring, summer and harvest, surpasses all description; and the variety of animals, is much greater here than in the other parts of the globe. Africa lies between the parallels of 37. 0. N. and 35. 0. S. latitude, and between 17. 0. W. and 51. 0. E. longitude, and may be divided as follows: Morocco, Algiers, Tunis, Tripoli, Barca, Egypt, Biledulgerid, Zaara, Negroland, Guinea; Upper Ethiopia, including Nubia, Abyssinia, and Abex; Lower Ethiopia, Loango, Congo, Angola, Benguela, Mataman, Ajan, Zanguebar, Monomotapa, Monoemugi, Sofala, Terra de Natal, and Caffraria. The length of Africa, from the Cape of Good Hope to the most northern part, is 4600 miles; and it's greatest breadth, from Cape Verd to Cape Guardafui, is 3500.

ALEPPO, a city of Syria, called by the natives Haleb, and anciently Berea, is the capital of a province and residence of a pacha, and only yields to Constantinople and Cairo in extent, population, and riches; in buildings, however, it is inferior to none of the Turkish cities. The inhabitants are computed, by some travellers, at 235,000, of whom 200,000 are Turks, 30,000 Christians, and 5000 Jews; but this computation is thought to be large. The language generally spoken is vulgar Arabic: but the Turks, Armenians, Syrians, and Jews, in conversing with those of their own nation, use their respective languages. The Christians have their houses in the suburbs, and carry on a considerable trade in silks, camlets, Turkey leather, &c. Several European nations have factories and consuls, which are much respected here. Considered as a commercial city, Aleppo is the great emporium of this part of the world, communicating, by it's caravans, with Isphahan, Buflorah, Damascus, Egypt, Mecca, and Constantinople. Commerce is carried on here chiefly by barter. Each separate branch of business has it's particular bazar, or market. The slaughter houses are in the suburbs, open to the fields. Here are a castle, a great many stately mosques, and caravanseras, with fountains and reservoirs of water, and vineyards and gardens well planted with most kinds of fruit. The streets are narrow, but well paved with large square stones, and kept very clean. The water in all the wells in the city is brackish; but good water is brought from some springs about five miles off, by an aqueduct, said to have been built by the empress Helena. Aleppo is seated on a small stream of fresh water, which is very dry, called Heylan, and is 170 miles N. by E. of Damascus, and 60 miles from the sea. Lat. 35. 45. N. lon. 37. 20. E.

ALESSIO-LISSUS, a town of Turkish Albania, situated near the mouth of the Drino. Here is a castle, where the famous Scanderberg, prince of Epirus, died, and was buried in 1467. The Turks have such a veneration for his memory, that they carry away pieces of his tomb for relics, and esteem them as an effectual charm for animating their courage in battle.

Aleworth, Nott. near Mansfield. Aleworth, Northamp. near Thrapston.

ALET, a town in the dept. of Aude, remarkable for it's baths, and for the grains of gold and silver found in the stream which runs from the Pyrenees, at the foot of which it stands, and from whence the Romans dug gold. It is seated on the river Aude, 15 miles S. of Carcassone. Lat. 42. 59. N. lon. 2. 25. E.

ALEXANDRETTA, or SCANDeroon, a town, or rather village, of Syria, the sea port of Aleppo, from which it is distant about 70 miles W. The climate here is very unwholesome in summer, from a malignant, intermitting fever; some ships having lost even their whole crews in a short time: while the heats are so excessive, many of the inhabitants retire to the neighbouring villages among the mountains, where they have excellent water, and delicious fruits. A traveller observes, that that tombs are more numerous here than houses: the road, however, is the only one on the coast of Syria, where vessels can anchor on a solid bottom. Lat. 36. 35. N. lon. 36. 23. E.

ALEXANDRIA, or SCANDERIA, once a magnificent, rich, and celebrated city of Egypt, built by Alexander the Great, near the most westerly branch of the Nile, soon after the overthrow of Tyre, about 333 years before the Christian era. It was long esteemed the finest city in the world after Rome; we may form some idea of it's inhabitants from the account of Diodorus Siculus, who relates that it had on it's rolls in his time (44 years before the Christian era) 300,000 freemen. The celebrated library, which was founded here by Ptolemy Soter, and placed in the temple of Serapis, containing, in his time, 400,000 volumes, and by addition of his successors 700,000, was, in 642, destroyed by order of the Saracen khalif, who became master of the city. The Saracen general who took it, said, in his letter to the khalif, that he found in it 4000 palaces, 4000 baths, 40,000 Jews, who paid tribute, 400 royal circi, and 12,000 gardeners, who supplied the city with all kinds of herbs in great plenty. At present it does not contain above 12,000 or 14,000 inhabitants: a mixture from different nations, as well as from various parts of the Turkish empire. The Christian Copti, Greeks, and Armenians, are very numerous here; the Europeans all pass under the name of Franks. Although Alexandria is now so much decayed, that the rubbish in some places overtops the houses, yet there are still some remains of it's ancient splendor, particularly Pompey's Pillar, and two obelisks of hieroglyphics. The ancient Pharos, a watch-tower, so famous in antiquity, that it was numbered among the seven wonders of the world, is now turned into a castle, called Pharillon, and is still used to direct vessels into the harbour. This city was a place of great trade, before the Portuguese discovered the passage to India by the Cape of Good Hope, the commodities of the East Indies being deposited here on their way to Europe by the Red Sea. Lat. 30. 21. N. lon. 31. 11. E.

ALGIERS, a country of Africa, extending about 300 miles in length from E. to W. and from 40 to 100 in breadth, along the Barbary coast; has Mount Atlas on the S. Tunis on the E. and Morocco on the W. The Turks, who are not above 7000 in number, have the government in their hands, and the Moors, or natives, have no share in it. It is a kind of republic, under the protection of the grand seignior, and is governed by a sovereign, or dey, who seldom undertakes any thing of importance without the counsel of the Janizaries. The Arabs, who live in tents, are a distinct people, governed by their own laws, though the Turks interfere when they think fit. The dey is absolute in some respects, although he is elected by the Turkish soldiers, and frequently deposed and put to death by them. The revenues of the government rise from the tribute paid by the Moors and Arabs; and the prizes they take, or the piracies they commit at sea, sometimes equal the taxes they lay upon the natives. The stems of the vines here are so large, that a man can hardly grasp them with his arms, and the bunches of grapes are a foot and a half long. The natives are strong and of a tawny complexion; their religion is Mahometanism, and their language a dialect of the Arabic: they also use that jargon, composed of the French, Italian, and Spanish languages, called Lingua-Franca, which prevails along the shores of the Mediterranean.

ALGIERS, a large town of Barbary, and capital of the country of Algiers. It is built on the declivity of a hill, and is of the form of an amphitheatre, next the harbour, so that the houses, appearing one above another, make a very fine appearance from the sea. The tops of the houses are all flat, and the people walk on them in the evenings, to take the air: they are also covered with earth, and are used as gardens. The streets are very narrow; the adjoining country, however, is adorned with gardens and fine villas, watered with fountains. The mole of the harbour is 500 paces in length, extending from the main land to a small island. The number of inhabitants is said to consist of 100,000 Mahometans, 15,000 Jews, and 4000 Christian slaves. Algiers is situated opposite Minorca, 380 miles W. of Tunis. Lat. 36. 49. N. lon. 2. 18. They occupy a ſpace of about 900 miles in length, and from 60 to 200 in breadth, eaſtward of the Miſſiſſippi and the five lakes; that is, from Hudſon's River to Georgia. The different ridges, which compoſe this immenſe range, have different names in different ſtates; as, the Kittattiny, the Blue, the North, and South Mountains. They are not confuſedly ſcattered and broken, riſing here and there into high peaks, over-topping each other; but ſtretch along, in uniform ridges, ſcarce-ly half a mile high, ſpreading towards the ſouth. Some of them terminate in high, perpendicular bluffs; others gradually ſubſide into a level country, giving riſe to the rivers which run ſoutherly into the Gulf of Mexico. In the back parts of Pennſylvania, ſcarce one acre in ten of this range is capable of culture; in other parts, extenſive tracts of fine arable and paſture land intervene between the ridges, having generally a rich, black ſoil; and ſome of the mountains will admit of cultivation almoſt to their tops.

ALPS, the highest mountains in Europe, being about 2 miles in perpendicular height, dividing Italy from France, Switzerland, and Germany. They have several names. The Maritime Alps extend from Vado as far as the source of the river of the same name, or even the Po; the Cottian Alps, from the source of the Vado to the city of Susa; the Grecian Alps, from the city of Susa to the mountain of St. Bernard; the Pennian Alps, from Mount St. Bernard to Mount St. Gothard; by the latter are bounded the Rhetian Alps, which extend to the source of the river Piave: and, lastly, the Norician, or Carnician Alps, extend themselves from the Piave as far as Istria, and the source of the Sau or Saave. The Alps have but few passes, and those difficult of access; Hannibal, the Carthaginian general, attempting those on the side of Piedmont, when he invaded Italy, lost most of his elephants; he accomplished his purpose, however, by making his way with acets; not with vinegar (as it has been erroneously translated) for dissolving the snow, but with hatchets for cutting it away. The prospect from many parts of this enormous range of mountains is extremely romantic. The Glaciers of the Alps are immense masses of ice, lodged upon the gentler declivities of the mountains, and exhibiting the most grotesque and and fantastic representations. From the valley of Chamouni there is a view of a vast chain of mountains, inaccessible, and covered with ice, and of Mont Blanc above the rest, whose top seems to reach and even pierce the highest region of the clouds. The chain, upon which this mountain seems to look down, like a giant, is composed of masses of rocks, which terminate in pikes or spires, called the Needles, and which seem ranged like tents in a camp. Their sides are covered with fretted streaks of ice and snow.

ALPS, LOWER, a department of France including part of the late province of Provence, is so called from its vicinity to the mountains of the same name. Digne is the capital.

ALPS, UPPER, a department of France including part of the late province of Dauphiny. The capital is Gap.

ALPUJARRAS, or ALPUXARRES, LOS, mountains of Granada, inhabited by the ancient Moriscoes, who profess Christianity, speak a medley of Arabic and Spanish, and carefully cultivate the ground, which produces excellent fruits and wine. These mountains extend about 50 miles in length from E. to W. and are so high that their summits are visible, not only from Gibraltar, but even from the coast of Africa, between Ceuta and Tangier.

AMADABAT, a large, populous, and trading city, the capital of Guzerat. The Gentoos have hospitals here for birds and sick animals. The rajah lives very splendidly, and maintains 12,000 horse and 50 elephants. Amadabat is pleasantly situated, has 12 gates, and is surrounded by a wall flanked with towers. The royal square, 700 paces long, and 400 broad, (planted round with palm, date, orange, and citron trees) is formed by the castle, of itself as large as a little town, the courts of judicature, palaces, and the grand caravanera, for lodging strangers and travellers. Besides smaller mosques, here are 30 large ones, one of them being very magnificent; also, 16 pagodas, one of which was converted into a mosque, by Aurengzebe, who ordered a cow to be killed in the temple, being assured, that the Gentoos, considering it as polluted, would never enter it again. Here the Armenians, Abyssinians, and Jews, have their respective places of worship; and the English, and other European merchants have their factors, and purchase fine chintz, calicoes, and other Indian merchandise. It lies 120 miles N. of Surat, and 40 NE.

AMATO, a town and river of Calabria Citra.

AMAYA, a town of Leo.

AMAZON, or ORELLANA, a river of S. America, which has it's source among the Andes, in Peru, not far from the S. Sea, from whence running eastward, it pours into the ocean, directly under the equinoctial line. This largest of all rivers is, at it's mouth, 150 miles broad, and 1500 miles from its mouth, 30 or 40 fathoms deep. It runs at least 3000 miles, forms during it's course many islands in itself, receives near 200 other rivers, many of which have a course of 500, or 600 leagues, some of them not inferior to the Danube, or the Nile; and, in pouring itself into the ocean, repels the waters of the sea, to the distance of many leagues from the land.

AMAZONS, a supposed race of warring women, in antiquity, living in Amasia, on the banks of the Euxine, and maintaining themselves as a nation of women, on their own separate territory, distinctly from the men. Perhaps, in the ruder ages of antiquity, companies of women following their husbands to battle, and sometimes fighting their enemies, may have given rise to the romantic descriptions of the Amazons, by the ancients; as in later times, the Amazons of S. America seem to have had a similar origin, with the wonder-stricken Spaniards.

AMAZONIA, a country in S. America, bounded on the N. by Terra Firma and Guiana; on the E. by the Atlantic and Brazil; on the S. by Paraguay and Peru; and on the W. by Peru. It was first traversed in 1580, by Francisco Orellana, who coming from Peru, sailed down the great river, to the Atlantic Ocean. Observing companies of women (or perhaps of men, for the Indians have a custom of plucking out the beard by the roots) in arms, on it's banks, he called the country Amazonia; or the Land of the Amazons, and gave the name of Amazon to the river, which had formerly been called Maragnon. Condamine, who afterwards went into those parts, to measure a degree on the meridian, could perceive no such appearance of hostile women. The soil is very rich and fertile; the trees, fields, and plants, are verdant all the year round. The rivers and lakes are infested with crocodiles, alligators, and serpents. Their banks are inhabited by different tribes of Indians, governed by petty sovereigns, distinguished from their subjects by coronets of beautiful feathers. The Spaniards have made many attempts to settle in this country; but difficulties and disasters have hitherto rendered their designs abortive. On a part of the coast, between Cape North and the mouth of the Amazon, the Portuguese indeed have made some settlements.

AMBAMARJAM, or AMBARA, the capital of Abyssinia. Lat. 13. 12. N. lon. 35. 14. E.

AMBAR, a river of Bavaria.

AMBERG MOUNTAIN, in E. Gothland.

AMBERG, a town of Bavaria, capital of the Upper Palatinate. It's chief trade arises from it's iron-mines and manufactures. It is strongly fortified, having a castle and armoury. It is seated on the river Ills, 40 miles E. of Nuremburg. Lat. 49. 30. N. lon. 11. 17. E.

AMBOULE, a fertile province of Madagascar, somewhat to the northward of lat. 23 S.

AMBOYNA, the chief of the Molucca Islands, remarkable for the quantity of cloves and nutmegs it produces. The natives wear large whiskers, and their dress is only a piece of slight stuff, wrapped round their middle. The English and Dutch had factories here, by mutual agreement, at the beginning of the seventeenth century; but the Dutch, with a perfidy and atrocious barbarity, which will stain their annals to the latest ages with indelible infamy, expelled the English by force, and tortured and put to death many of them, pretending that they had entered into a conspiracy with the Chinese, against them. Since that time, the Dutch have possessed the entire dominion of the Spice Islands, and excluded the rest of the world from trading there. The English, however, have taken them in the present war, and have now a number of troops in each of their forts; particularly in Fort Victoria, at Amboyna, a place so strong by nature and art, as to be, in a manner, impregnable. Lat. 4. 0. S. lon. 127. 20. E.

AMBRAS, AMRAS, or OMBRA, a town and fortress of Tyrol, in Austria, 2 miles SE. of Inspruck, which was, as its name (shade) rather imports, a summer retreat for the arch-dukes. The statues, medals, treasures of gold, precious stones, and rarities, in the museum here, are immense. There is also the trunk of an oak, inclosing the whole body of a deer, supposed to have perished in the snow, and to have been covered with the mud and wreck of the trees, &c. washed from the mountains by the thaw. The tree, thus deposited, and taking root, inclosed with it's roots the body of the animal, and, in it's further growth, raised the body up with it. Here is also a good library, and a gallery of busts and admirable paintings.

*AMERESBURY, or AMESBURY, an ancient town in Wiltshire, on the Avon, consisting of two streets, that intersect each other. It is 80 miles from London, and 1 from Stonehenge. Market on Friday.

AMELIA, a county of Virginia.

Amerden-Hall, Essex, near Audley-End.

AMERICA, the largest of the four grand divisions of the globe, is bounded on all sides by the ocean, and stretches, in it's extensive range, through every inhabited latitude or climate in the world; and the waters on it's northern extremity seem to be bound up in everlasting frost. The parts that have a vertical sun, are so near the sea, or the lofty Andes, constantly covered with snow, that they experience not the excessive heats of Africa; and the complexion of the natives, or aborigines, is by no means very dark; it is generally of a reddish or copper colour, from the Straits of Magellan to the borders of Hudson's Bay. This immense continent is divided into N. and S. America, which are joined by the Isthmus of Darien. It's mountains, rivers, and lakes, are the largest in the world. America took it's name from Americus Vesputius, a Florentine, who having accompanied Ojeda, a Spanish adventurer thither, and drawing up an amusing history of his voyage, insinuated therein, that he had first discovered that continent. The discovery of America, was made so lately as 1491, by Christopher Columbus, a Genoese, a bold adventurer, a patriot, and a man of humanity.

At that time, the authority of the pope, over the whole world, was generally acknowledged throughout Europe. He had granted, to the Portuguese, all the lands, islands, &c. they had discovered, or might discover, to the eastward of the Azores; hence the other Europeans were deprived of the advantages of the trade to the East Indies, by the Cape of Good Hope, which the Portuguese had but lately discovered. The costly articles of the east, which had heretofore come through the Red Sea and Mediterranean, and afforded to the Genoese a lucrative trade, were now brought by the Cape of Good Hope. Columbus saw, with concern, the loss his country had sustained, and concluding the earth to be round, proposed to evade the force of the pope's bull, by sailing to India by a western course. His countrymen were not better geographers than the bishop of Rome. They treated his schemes as the reveries of a mad man; he tried other courts of Europe with similar success, till at length Isabella, queen of Spain, sold even her jewels to fit him out for the expedition. America furnishes most of the vegetable and mineral productions, to be found in the other parts of the world, together with a variety of valuable drugs and other commodities, which were unknown here before it's discovery. The animals on the north are much the same all round the pole, but, in the southern parts of America, they are generally more diminutive and feeble; and some tribes there are, which, if ever they existed in the old world (as Europe, Asia, and Africa are called) have there become extinct, while the most strong and savage quadrupeds seem not to have ever arrived here. Nearly the same variety of birds is found in the new world as in other parts, and some there are, that are peculiar to the climate. America may be divided into Indian Nations, United States, and European Colonies. The countries possessed by Great Britain, are Labrador, or New Britain, Upper and Lower Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. The thirteen United States comprehend New Hampshire, including the province of Main, Massachusetts, Rhode-Island, and Connecticut in New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North and South Carolina, and Georgia. Vermont, in New England, and Kentucky, have been lately added to the union; and all the country to the N. of Ohio, extending from Pennsylvania to the E. the lakes on the N. and Mississippi on the W. is intended by congress to be divided into ten new states, to be called Washington, Metropotamia, Pessilippi, Michiganai, Illinois, Chersonesus, Saratoga, Sylvania, Assenipi, and Polopotamia. In North America, Spain possesses E. and W Florida, part of Louisiana, New Mexico, California, and Old Mexico, or New Spain. In South America, they hold Terra Firma, or Castile del Oro, Peru, Chili, and Paraguay, or La Plata. The French have Cayenne, and the Dutch, Surinam; and the Portuguese have Brasil. America extends a distance of 9000 miles, from lat. 56. o. S. to the impenetrable depths of the northern frigid zone, where it nearly extends through every degree of western longitude from London; and varies in it's breadth, from it's narrowest part, 60 miles at the Isthmus of Darien, to 3690, it's greatest breadth, across the northern part of N. America.

AMERSFORT, a considerable town of Utrecht, in the Netherlands, with a manufacture of dimity and bombazine. It is seated in a fertile country, on the river Ems, 12 miles NE. of Utrecht. Lat. 52 14. N. lon. 5. 22. E.

AMSTEL. See AMSTERDAM.

AMSTERDAM, a large, rich, populous, trading, and handsome city of Holland, the capital of the United Provinces. The walls are high and strongly fortified, and the bridge, which joins the rampart, is built over the Amstel, and is an extraordinary piece of architecture. The public buildings are fine and numerous. Here are many handsome churches and hospitals, for persons of different ages, sexes, religious professions, and countries. To the good sense and candour of the Dutch, in tolerating all professions of religion, when persecution prevailed in other parts, we may, in a great measure, attribute their prosperity, and the populousness of their capital. This city is computed to be about half the size of London; the foundation is laid upon piles, driven into the morass whereon it stands, and under the stadthouse alone, there are 13,000. The exchange is one of the principal ornaments of the city; and the harbour, though difficult of access, because of the shoals, is one of the largest and finest in Europe, where a vast number of ships may be seen constantly; the streets are spacious and well paved, and most of them have canals with rows of trees of each side. It is seated at the confluence of the rivers Amstel and Wye, 65 miles N. of Antwerp, 175 E. by N. of London, 240 N. by E. of Paris, and 560 NW. of Vienna. Lat. 52. 23. N. lon. 4. 50. E.

AMSTERDAM, or TONGATABOO, an island in the South Sea, first discovered by Tasman. It is about 21 miles in extent from E. to W. and about 13 from N. to S. Lat. 21. 11. S. lon. 175. 0. W.

AMU, AMUR, or JAMUR, a river in Asiatic Russia, 400 miles in length. It is formed by the junction of the rivers Argun and Schilk, and, passing by Nertchinsk, falls into the N. Pacific Ocean, in lat. 53. N. lon. 142. E.

AMUL, a river of Siberia, which runs into the Tuba, 48 miles ESE. of Abakansk.

Amwell, a village in Hertfordshire, a little to the S. of Ware, and 21 miles from London. One part is called Amwell-Magna, and the other Amwell-Parva; the head or source of the New River, which supplies London with water, is at the latter place. This canal was projected by Sir H. Middleton; he began it in 1606, and finished it in 1612, by the assistance of the city of London, and by aid of parliament; but with a considerable loss of his own property, he perfected the work. The extent of the canal is near 39 miles; it has 43 sluices, and there are 215 bridges over it. Amwick, Lincolnshire, between Sleaford and Tattershall.

ANABOA. See ANNOBONA.

ANCLAM, a town of Swedish Pomerania, in Upper Saxony. It made a good figure once among the Hanse towns, and has an advantageous site among good corn lands and excellent pasture, with the convenience of fishing and exporting their commodities, by means of the river Pene, on which it is seated. Formerly it was called Tanglim, and some have supposed it to have been the seat of the Angli, mentioned by Tacitus; some of whom removed from thence to the Elbe, and afterwards to S. Britain. Anclam is 20 miles S. of Gripswald. Lat. 53. 52. N. lon. 14. 2. E.

Ancliff, Lanc. 2 miles from Wigan, has a curious spring, called the burning well; which, on putting a lighted candle to it, immediately catches fire, with a heat strong enough to make a pot boil, though the water itself still remains cold. Ancoates, Lanc. 1 mile from Manchester.

ANCOBER, or RIO CORBE, a territory of Guinea, between the gold coast and the country of Axim, and a river of the same name flowing through it, the banks of which are adorned with fine, lofty trees, affording a very agreeable shade. On the western bank is a populous village. Lat. 4. 48. N.

ANCONA, anciently ANCON, a district, and considerable sea-port in the pope's territories, on the Adriatic Sea, having Umbria on the S. and Urbino on the W. Commerce has rapidly increased here of late years, through the patronage of Clement XII. who made it a free port, and built a mole to render the harbour safe. It is erected on the ruins of the ancient mole, raised by the emperor Trajan, and is above 2000 feet in length, 100 in breadth, and about 60 in depth, from the surface of the sea. Near this stands the Triumphal Arch of Trajan, which, next to the Maison Quarrée, at Nîmes, is the most beautiful and entire monument of Roman magnifi- cence existing. Here, likewise, Clement erected a lazaretto, which advances a little way into the sea, in the form of a pentagon, and is an elegant, as well as useful edifice. The Jews have a synagogue here, and are established in great numbers. Ancona is 116 miles NNE. of Rome. Lat. 43. 38. N. lon. 13. 35. E.

ANDES, or CORDILLERAS, a chain of mountains, or rather two huge ridges, running almost the whole length of South America, from the Isthmus of Darien to the Straits of Magellan, through Peru and Chili, a distance of 5000 miles; and in a line parallel to, and but a little distance from the Pacific Ocean. They are also the loftiest, as well as the most extensive range of hills in the whole world. Even the plain of Quito, which may be considered as a base of the Andes, is elevated farther above the sea, than the top of the Pyrenees; and, in different places, they rise more than one third higher than the Pike of Teneriffe, heretofore accounted the highest part of the whole earth. The Andes may literally be said, to hide their heads in the clouds: the storms often roll, and the thunders burst below their summits; which, though exposed to the rays of the sun, in the centre of the torrid zone, are covered with everlasting snows. From experiments made with a barometer, on the mountain of Cotopaxi, it appeared, that its summit was elevated 6252 yards, which is something more than 3 geographical miles, above the surface of the sea. These mountains give rise to the largest rivers in the world: and, when the volcanos, which are numerous here, break out among the snows, the sudden thaws produce such torrents of water, as to deluge the plains, and carry off the inhabitants, both man and beast.

ANDES. See PIETOLA.

ANDREW, St. a town of Carinthia.

ANDREW, St. an island, and a town of Hungary.

ANDREW'S, St. a town, or royal borough, of Fifeshire, formerly the metropolis of the Pictish kingdom. It is seated on a bay, on the level top of a small hill, commanding a view of the German Ocean. The cathedral, once a large Gothic structure, founded in 1161, and 157 years in building, was so completely demolished in a single day, by John Knox and his adherents, that little of it now remains. The university, founded by the bishop Wardlaw, in 1411, consists of 3 colleges; the Old College, the St. Leonard's, and the New College, and has produced many learned men. The houses, though built of stone, are gone to decay, there being no manufactures here, except the trifling one of golf-balls, which, however, maintains a great number of people; and the harbour, which has suffered greatly by the encroachments of the sea, is only an artificial one, formed by piers, with a narrow entrance. It is 30 miles NE. of Edinburgh.

ANDREW'S, St. a town in Nova Scotia.

ANDREW'S,

ANDREW'S ST. an island, with a town of Dalmatia.

ANGERS, a large and populous city in the dept. of Maine and Loire, formerly capital of Anjou. It is seated near the confluence of the Sarte and Loire, and is divided by the Maine into two parts; the western, extending into the plain, and the eastern, which rises on the acclivity of a hill. It's environs present a pleasing view of numerous country-houses, upwards of a hundred wind-mills, well cultivated kitchen-gardens, and eminences that produce good white wine. The inhabitants are computed at 28,000. The manufacture of handkerchiefs and sail cloth, is carried on here; the produce of the slate-quarries at the extremity of the suburb of Bressigny, forms likewise an important article of commerce. In Angers there is a spacious square, and four beautiful public walks. It is 50 miles NE. of Nantz, and 175 SW. of Paris. Lat. 47. 30. N. lon. 0. 35. W.

ANGIHART, a village of Tuscany.

ANGLE, a town in the dept. of La Vendee; and a town in the dept. of Vienne.

ANGLEN, or ANGELEN, a tract of country in Sleswick, from 16 to 20 miles in length, and little less in breadth, lying between Flensburg and Sleswick. It is subject, for the most part, to the duke of Sleswick Gottorp. Many authors suppose, that this small country was the aboriginal seat of the Angli, or Angles, who, joining with the Saxons, when called in to assist the Britons, in process of time became masters of the country, and gave it the name which it now bears, England.

ANGLES, a town in the dept. of Hereford.

Angleborough, in Limerick, Munster.

ANGLESEY, or ANGLESEA, ISLE OF, the most western county of N. Wales, through which the packets regularly pass between London and Dublin. It was called by the ancients Mona, and was the seat of the Druids, of whom there seem to be some monumental remains, in the erections of huge stones, singly and collectively, in circles, and one upon another, as at Stonehenge; they are without any inscription, to shew the time or occasion of their erection. Here are also found some Roman and other antiquities. Anglesey is an island, being separated from Carnarvonshire by a long and narrow strait, called Menai, or Menu, which, in some places, however, is fordable at low water. It is about 24 miles long and 14 broad; contains 74 parishes, and about 11,000 inhabitants. It is a fertile spot, has some valuable quarries, and a very rich copper mine on Pary's Mount.

Anglesey Abbey, Camb. near Botolph.

Angleton, Sussex, near Lewes. Angmering, E. and W. Sussex, two small villages on the English Channel, near Arundel.

ANGOL, a pleasant, well-watered city of Chili, situated on a very fertile plain, 125 miles N. of Baldivia. Lat. 37. 56. S. lon. 72. 59. W.

ANGOLA, a fertile kingdom of Lower Guinea, or Congo, situated between the rivers Dande and Coanza. It is bounded on the N. by Congo Proper, on the E. by Matamba, and on the S. by Benguela, and on the W. by the Ocean. It produces Indian corn, beans, oranges, lemons, and several other fruits. The country is divided among several petty princes; the Portuguese have several settlements on the coast, and the English and Dutch yet carry on that infamous traffic, the slave-trade. Polygamy is allowed in this country, and they practise the initiatory rite of the Hebrews. They seem to be an amiable and peaceful people; they are tall, and are reckoned to be elegant figures, and very handsome; and from the fertility of the soil, and the simplicity of their manners, they live very much at their ease; it is perhaps from this circumstance, that these injured people, when carried into slavery, shew an impatience of fatigue, and an independency of spirit, superior to those from the Gold Coast, where the soil is barren, and where they have been accustomed to hardship and labour. Angola is situated between 9 and nearly 12 degrees S. lat. and between 10 and 20 E. lon.

ANGORA, or ANCOURA, anciently ANCYRA, a town of Natolia, in Asiatic Turkey, remarkable for it's remains of antiquity, as inscriptions, pillars, ruins of temples, &c. of porphyry and old marble. The castle, which is as large as a small town, and well inhabited, both by the Christians and Turks, is built of white marble, and stone resembling porphyry; and throughout the walls of the town, which are low, and those of the houses, which are generally built of unburnt brick, antique fragments are interspersed. The city of Angora is computed to have 100,000 inhabitants in it, 90,000 of whom are Turks; and about 1000 of these are janizaries: Greeks, Armenians, &c. compose the remaining 10,000. The country produces very good red wine, and they have excellent rice on some of the rivers. They have the finest breed of goats here in the world; their hair or wool is quite white, and almost as fine as silk; a great trade is carried on in this article, and the finest stuffs, especially camlets, are made of it. The exports of Angora to Holland, France, and England, are about 1600 camel loads yearly. It is 212 miles SE. of Constantinople. Lat. 39. 30. N. lon. 32. 5. E.

ANGOT, a fruitful kingdom of Upper Ethiopia, environed with steep mountains. It has been wrested from Abyssinia by the Gallas.

ANGOULESME, a town of France in the dept. of Charente. It stands on a mountain surrounded with rocks, the river Charente running at the foot of it. It is 20 miles SW. of Limoges, and 250 S. by W. of Paris. Lat. 45. 39. N. lon. 0. 14. E.

ANGOUMOIS, late a province of France, of which Angoulesme was the capital, but now included in the dept. of Charente. It is hilly, but fertile, has good iron mines, and excellent paper manufactories.

ANGRA, a district, and a sea-port on the S. side of the island of Tercera. The city of Angra is the metropolis of all the Azores. The harbour is good, and the town well built and populous; it has the privilege of sending a deputy to the cortes, or states of Portugal. The English and Dutch have consuls here, though the commerce is inconsiderable; what they import, is mostly wood and corn, and other provisions. Lat. 38. 38. N. lon. 27. 12. W.

ANGROGNE, or ANGROGNA, a mountainous, yet fruitful parish, or township of Piedmont, through which runs a little river of the same name. It is accessible only by two passes at the S. and E. and there are retreats among the rocks, where, during the most violent persecutions against the Vaudois, their old barte, bards, as they are called, or valley-ministers, preached without interruption. Sometimes the valleys of Piedmont are called by the name of Angrogne. The town of Angrogne is 7 miles W. of Pignerol.

Angton, Suffex, near Arundel.

ANGSO, a castle of Upland.

ANGUED, a province of Algiers, or rather a desert of Temecen. Hordes, or clans of Arabs, and others, live here mostly on plunder, obliging travellers to pay them money for their passports, which are a kind of small flag at the end of a lance. They have but little corn, and they feed principally on dates, milk, and what wild game they kill. They range at pleasure about the country, acknowledging none but their own chief, and paying no tribute to the Algerines.

ANGUILLA, or SNAKE ISLAND, a woody, fertile, level tract, and the most northerly of the English Carribee Islands. It is about 30 miles in length, and 10 in breadth; and there is good anchorage on the south side. Lat. 18. 21. N. lon. 63. W.

ANGUILLARA, a town of Patrimonio, in the pope's territories; also a lake, and a small but handsome town of Padua.

ANGUS, a shire of Scotland, sometimes called Forfar, from the name of the county town, is bounded on the N. by Aberdeenshire, on the NE. by Kincardineshire on the E. by the German Ocean, on the S. by the Frith of Tay, and on the W. by Perthshire. It is about 40 miles in length, and 30 in breadth. It has many lakes and hills, with quarries of slate and freestone, and mines of lead and iron ore; the lower grounds are fertile in corn and pasture; and along the coast, the salmon fishery is very extensively carried on. The principal rivers are the N. and S. Esk.

ANHALT, a principality of Upper Saxony, 42 miles long and 8 broad. It abounds in corn and hops, has rich mines, and is watered by the Elbe, the Saale, or Salde, and the Mulda.

ANHALT, or ANHOLT, an island in the Categat, 8 miles from the coast of Jutland, and 10 from Zealand. It is dangerous for seamen, for which reason a light-house is erected on it. Lat. 56. 38. N.

ANIAN, a barren, sandy desert of Ajan, in Africa.

ANIAN. See BEERING.

ANJENGO, a small town of Malabar, held by the East India Company. Their merchandise consists chiefly in pepper and calicoes. Lat. 8. 49. N. lon. 76. 1. E.

ANTRIM, a county of Ulster, bounded on the N. and E. by the sea, on the S. by the county of Down, and on the W. by the counties of Londonderry and Tyrone. The country is pretty fruitful, and the linen manufacture is carried on here very extensively, to the supposed amount of £263,000 annually. The inhabitants are computed at 160,000, and the number of houses at 21,922. The principal river is the Bann.

ANTRIM, the capital of the country is a small trading town, situated at the NE. end of Lough Neagh, 13 miles W. of Carrickfergus, and about 84 miles N. of Dublin.

Antrobus, Chesh. near Bucklow. Antroon, Cornw. near Helfton-Downs.

ANTWERP, a large, handsome city of Brabant, with a strong citadel, seated on the Scheldt. About 200 years ago it was the greatest place for trade in Europe; but the civil wars, that were the consequence of the tyranny of Philip II. diminished that commerce, which was almost annihilated in 1648, when, by the treaty of Munster, between Spain and the United Provinces, the navigation of the Scheldt to large ships, was shut. Upon the Seven United States of Holland being thus declared a free state, and the navigation of the Scheldt yielded to them, the Dutch built forts upon the river, to hinder all ships from coming up, except such as paid them custom, and after that time the trade was principally removed from Antwerp to Amsterdam, till then an inconsiderable town; but by the late revolutions, all these restrictions are done away. The streets of Antwerp are large and regular, in number 212, besides which are 22 public squares: the harbour is very commodious, the river being 400 yards wide, and, at the time of high water 22 feet deep; so that large vessels may come up to the quay; and, by the canals from the river, to the doors of the houses. The public buildings are very handsome, and, at least, 200 in number. The exchange cost 300,000 crowns. From this building Sir Thomas Gresham took the model of the Royal Exchange, in London, as did the burghers of Amsterdam that of theirs. The town-house is a grand piece of architecture, and stands in the great market place. The house of the Hanse towns, built for the accommodation of the Oolterlingen, or eastern merchants from the Baltic, is a square building of stone. In the middle story, which has a gallery quite round the square, there are 300 lodging rooms; the cellars serve for stables. It is 22 miles N. of Brussels, 22 NE. of Ghent, and 65 S. of Amsterdam.

APPIAN-WAY, an ancient paved highway of Italy. It began within the city of Rome, at the places where Constantine's triumphal arch is erected. The first projector of it, Appius Claudius Cæcus, at an immense expence, from the public treasury, carried it as far as Capua; Julius Cæsar, from Capua to Beneventum; and Augustus thence to Brundisium. The Appian-Way, a great part of which remains entire to this day, was above 300 miles in length, and about 15 feet in breadth. Caius Gracchus placed stones along it, called cippi, for travellers to sit and rest on, and riders to mount at, who, in those days, had no stirrups; also mile-stones, called miliaria, or lapides.

APPLEBY, the assize-town of Westmorland, pleasantly seated on the river Eden, by which it is almost surrounded. It was formerly a Roman station, named Aballaba; and, from the old English statutes, it appears, that parliaments have been holden here. It is 10 miles SE. of Penrith, and 266 NW. of London. ARA, a river of Spain, which joins the Cinca at Ainsa, in Arragon.

ARABIA, a country of Asia, on the SW. It may be accounted a peninsula, being joined on the N. to Syria; bounded on the NE. by the river Euphrates, which divides it from Diarbeck, or Diarbekar, the ancient Mesopotamia; on the E. by the Gulfs of Persia and Ormus; on the S. by the Indian Ocean; and on the W. by the Red Sea, which separates it from Africa. It lies between 12 and 32 degrees N. latitude, and between 35 and nearly 60 E. lon. extending 1430 miles in length, and 1200 in breadth. It is divided, by Europeans, into Petrea, Deserta, and Felix; or the Stony, the Desert, and the Happy; but, by the Arabians themselves, into 6 provinces, viz. Hedjas, Yemen, Hadramaut, Oman, Lachsa or Hadsjar, and Nedsjid. Arabia Petrea is the smallest of the three, and towards the N. very mountainous, having few inhabitants because of it's barrenness. This is the wilderness through which the children of Israel passed, in their journeying from Egypt to Canaan. In Arabia Deserta, the plains of sand are so immense, that travellers, in crossing them, are obliged to make use of the mariner's compass, as if at sea; and the tempests are not less terrible here than on the ocean. The air is excessively hot; springs or streams are scarcely to be met with: a pestilential vapour sometimes passes along, which instantly kills those who happen to inhale it; and when the wind rises high, the desert assumes the appearance of the most rough and tempestuous sea. The sand is lifted from it's bed by the force of the winds, and driven along like waves, clouds, and rain; every thing that falls in it's way is overwhelmed, and whole caravans of travellers, with their horses and camels, find one common grave in the deluge of sand. "In the general aspect of this desert region," says a modern traveller, "which is that of a vast plain, terminated on all sides by the horizon, the eye seeks in vain for some intervening object to rest upon; and after sitting over a dismal waste of sand, or scorched brambles it returns to enjoy relaxation in the herds, and other property, with which the Arabian is surrounded. A deep and dismal silence reigns over this heavy landscape; no beast, no bird, no insect, is seen to diversify the sad uniformity of the scene." M. de Pagés observes that, in traversing the whole extent of Arabia Deserta, he saw "only 4 rabbits, 5 or 6 rats, 3 large and 7 or 8 small birds." "Here, indeed, all our ideas of deserts, as found in the poetical language of oriental tales, fall short of the truth! A stillness, like the silence of night, the faint remains of a breeze, still glowing with the fervour of the meridian sun, but sinking with his orb; an unbounded waste, covered with dark, grey sand, resembling the ashes of a furnace, and according with the raging heat of those regions; above, the vast canopy of heaven, across whose pale atmosphere no other object is seen, but the reddish disk of the sun dipt in the horizon, are circumstances which conspire to impress the mind of a spectator with an unpleasant melancholy." Along the banks of the Euphrates, however, where the land is fertilized, there are great flocks of sheep, and large herds of cattle and camels. Ostriches, also, are found there in great numbers. The produce of Arabia Felix, which is, by far, the most considerable of the three provinces, is myrrh, aloes, cassia, frankincense, spikenard, manna, and other costly gums; cinnamon, dates, oranges, lemons, pomegranates, figs, and other fruits; honey and wax in plenty; and immense quantities of coffee. In a country so various, and of such extent, we may expect the manners of the inhabitants to vary. Those in the fertile parts have long been domesticated; to them we are indebted for many valuable discoveries; they have been our preceptors in chemistry and mathematical science; they first introduced into Europe the invention of the ten arithmetical figures, and taught us their use. On the other hand, the Arabs in the Desert have no houses, but tents; they lead wandering lives, removing from place to place, partly for the sake of pasture, and partly to lie in wait for the caravans, which they often rob, as they travel over the Desert from Bussorah to Aleppo, and from Egypt to Mecca, the place of Mahomet's nativity.

ARACAN, or RECCAN, a fertile, but not a populous, country of Asia, on the NE. coast of the Bay of Bengal, having Meckley, on the N. and Burmah on the E. It is governed by 12 princes, subject to the chief king, who resides in his capital, called also Aracan, a city about as large as Amsterdam; through which the large and beautiful river, Chaberis or Aracan, glides in many streams. Lat. 20. 38. N. lon. 93. E. His palace is very large, and contains, it is said, 7 idols of cast gold, two inches thick, each of a man's height and covered with diamonds, rubies, and other precious stones; and, in his stables, he has horses, elephants, lions, tigers, &c. They have only two seasons, the rainy and the fair; the rainy season is, while the sun is on the N. side of the line, or during our spring and summer months; the rest of the year is their summer. Elephants, buffaloes, and tigers are numerous here. The articles of commerce are, timber, lead, tin, and elephants' teeth; and sometimes traders meet with diamonds, rubies, and other precious stones. The inhabitants are idolatrous; polygamy is permitted among them; admiring broad and flat foreheads, they bind leaden plates on their children's foreheads, as soon as they are born, and accounting long ears as a beauty, they so load them with rings, as to make them at last hang down to their shoulders.

ARCAHAYE, or L'ARCAHAYE, a parish, plain; or territorial district, in the French part of St. Domingo, which, tho' one of the smallest in the colony, embraces a space of about 74 miles in length. In the parish are 57 sugar estates, 300 coffee ditto, 4 indigo ditto, and about 100 small places where cotton is cultivated. The slaves are computed at 18,000, and the white inhabitants, from 1000 to 1200.

ARCHANGEL, a sea-port of Russia, seated on the Dwina, 4 miles from the White Sea, which is frozen up for three months in the winter, but the rest of the year is open. The passage to it, through the N. Sea, was first discovered by Capt. Richard Lane, an Englishman, in 1553, his ship being separated from the fleet of Sir Hugh Willoughby, then on an expedition to discover a NE. passage to China. Sir Hugh, with 70 men perished in Lapland; Lane wintered here. On the English first entering the White Sea, they found a fishing boat, the people in which, having never seen a ship before, fled before them; but, on a nearer approach, fell at their feet, and though they could hardly be persuaded to sell any thing without their prince's leave, gave them plenty of victuals for nothing. The English, from Elizabeth's time, had the exclusive privilege of trading here, and in the other northern ports of Russia, from Wardhus to the river Oby, till the death of Charles I. when the czar was so exasperated at their conduct, that he wholly deprived them of it; and since that time it has been open to all nations. The trade here is yet considerable, though it is greatly diminished since the building of Petersburg, from which it is distant 400 miles NE. Lat. 64. 34. N. lon. 39. 0. E.

ARDGLASS, now a decayed, but once a principal town of Down, in Ulster. Here is a long range of buildings, in the castle style, called by the inhabitants, the new works, though they have no tradition of its design or use. It extends 250 feet in length, in breadth only 24; the thickness of the walls is 3 feet: it has three towers in front joined to it, one at each end, and one in the centre, constructed on a design uniform and elegant. It has been divided into 18 apartments below, and the same number above, with a stair-case in the centre; each apartment on the ground floor had a small Gothic door, and a large square window, which seems to denote that they were shops or ware-rooms, occupied at some very early period, by merchants from foreign parts. Within 10 feet of the S. tower of this building stands a square castle, called Horn-castle, from the great quantity of ox, deer, and cow horns being found about it; it is 40 feet by 30, consists of two stories, and from the fire-places and other marks, appears to have been the kitchen and dining hall belonging to the merchants. Here are the remains of several other castles, towers, and gates, and within the NE. point of Ardglais harbour, is a very curious and natural cave, with a large entrance on the shore. The duties of this port were let to farm, so lately as the beginning of the reign of Charles I. It lies 7 miles NE. of Downpatrick.

Ardgroom, a harbour of Kerry, Munster.

ARRAGON, a province of Spain, bounded on the W. by Navarre and the Two Castiles; on the N. by Navarre and the Pyrenean Mountains; on the E. by Catalonia, and a part of Valencia; and on the S. by Catalonia and New Castile. It's extent from N. to S. is nearly 120 miles, and from E. to W. about 78. The river Ebro runs from NW. to SE. through the province, and divides it into two parts nearly equal. The air is pure and wholesome, and the country, near the rivers, is fertile in corn, wine, flax, and fruit; but, in general, it is dry, sandy, mountainous, and stoney. It produces saffron, and there are mines of salt. Saragossa is the capital.

ARRAGON, or ARAGON, a river of Spain, which rises in the Pyrenees, and falls into the Ebro, between Calahorra and Tudela.

ARRAN ISLES, three islands on the W. coast of Ireland, in the mouth of Galway-Bay. Lat. 53. 0. N. lon. 10. 0. W. They are called the S. ARRAN, a rocky and mountainous island of Scotland, in the Frith of Clyde, to the SW. of the Isle of Bute; about 23 miles long and 12 broad. It abounds with cattle, sheep, goats, and fowl; and agriculture here is somewhat advancing. The streams are stored with fish, especially salmon. The climate is cold, but healthful; and invalids annually resort thither to drink the whey of goats-milk. Among the rocks are found iron ore, spar, and a great variety of beautiful pebbles, susceptible of polish. On the coast are many spacious and wonderful caverns, which used to afford shelter to smugglers; one of these occasionally serves the inhabitants to hold a religious meeting in. They were once the retreats, perhaps the habitations, of ancient heroes. Tradition, in these parts, still preserves the memory of Fingal; and Robert Bruce took refuge in this island in the times of his greatest distress. Lat. 55. 40. N. lon. 5. 10. W.

ASIA, one of the four grand divisions of the globe, is situated between 25 and 180 degrees E. lon. and extends nearly from the equator to the impenetrable regions of the Arctic Pole. It is 4740 miles in length, from the Dardanelles to the eastern shore of Tartary, and 4380 in breadth, from the most southern part of Malacca, to the northern parts of Nova Zembla. Asia is bounded on the W. by the Red Sea, the Mediterranean, the Black Sea, the Don, the Volga, and an imaginary line extending from 54 to nearly 80 degrees N. latitude; on the N. by the Frozen Ocean; on the E. by the Pacific, and on the S. by the Indian Ocean. From the richness of it's soil, the deliciousness of it's fruits, the fragrantcy and balsamic quality of it's plants, spices, gums, &c. the quantity, variety, beauty, and value of it's gems, the fineness of it's silks, and cottons, and the richness of it's metals, it has generally been considered as the finest quarter of the globe. It exhibits nearly every variety of animals. Asia contains Siberia, Eastern and Western Tartary, China, India within and without the Ganges, Thibet, Persia, and the Turkish empire in Asia, which comprehends Georgia, Turcomania, Diarbeck, or Mesopotamia, Nattolia, Palestine, Syria, and part of Arabia.

ASIA MINOR. See NATOLIA.

ASSAM, or ACHAM, a country of Asia, bounded on the W. by Bengal and Bootan, on the N. by the mountains of Thibet, and on the SE. and S. by Meckley. The river Burampooter flows through the whole length of it. Its capital is Gerghon. The natives are fond of the flesh of dogs. Almost every housekeeper has an elephant: they live comfortably, and as the king is the sole proprietor of all the gold, silver, and other metals found in this kingdom, they pay no taxes. The invention of gunpowder is ascribed to the Assamese. It was known in China and Hindoostan in very remote antiquity; and in the code of Gentoo laws, there is a prohibition of the use of fire-arms; but, perhaps, these fire-arms were only some sort of missive torches, and the powder very short in it's effect of that which is made in later times. Assam lies between 91 and 96 degrees of E. lon. and between 25 and 28 N. lat.

ASSANCALE, a strong town of Armenia, with walls built, in a spiral line, all round the rock on which it stands, and strengthened with square towers. The ditches are about 2 fathoms over, cut out of the hard rock. It is situated on or near the river Ares, 22 miles E. of Erzerum.

Asselby, Yorkf. E. Riding, NW. of Howden. Assembly, Yorkf. near Thirsk.

ASTORGA, a small city of Leon, pleasantly situated in a plain, on the little river Tuera, 28 miles W. of the city of Leon. It is strong both by nature and art, and is called the City of Priests, from its cathedral being filled with ecclesiastics.

ASTRABAD, a trading town of Persia, capital of a district, to which it gives name. It is situated on the mouth of a river, at the SE. end of the Caspian Sea, 20 miles NE. of Ispahan. Lat. 36. 40. N. lon. 72. 10. E.

ASTRACAN, a territory in Asiatic Russia, including the N. and part of the W. side of the Caspian Sea, was formerly a kingdom, but is now divided into the governments of Caucasus and Saratof.

ASTRACAN, a large and populous city, seated on an island formed by the river Wolga, 50 miles NW. of the Caspian Sea. It is surrounded by strong walls, and has an excellent harbour, where the Europeans embark for Persia. It is noted for having excellent fish. It seldom rains here, but the river, on which it stands overflows, like the Nile; and when the water is run off, the grass grows in less than a month. From Astracan to Terki, on the side of the Caspian Sea, there are long marshes, which produce a vast quantity of salt, with which the Russians carry on a great trade. This city is supposed to have been, in very early times, the general staple for the productions of Persia, India, and Arabia. In the 14th century, when the Venetians were in possession of the trade of the Black Sea, they drew from this port, to their staple at Tanais, the Asiatic productions, with which they supplied the southern parts of Europe, while the articles designed for the north, were conveyed partly along the Wolga, and partly by land-carriage, to Ladoga, on the Volkhov, whence they were transported to Wisby, on the Isle of Gothland. The destructive expeditions of Tamerland drove, for some time, the trade of Asia from this channel to that of Smyrna.

Smyrna and Aleppo; and the discovery of the passage to India by the Cape of Good Hope, gave, to a great part of it, quite a different route. Astracan is still resorted to by many nations, and it's trade with India, Persia, &c. is yet considerable. It lies 800 miles SE. of Moscow. Lat. 46. 22. N. lon. 47. 40. E.

Astrop Wells, Northamp. near Banbury, in Oxfordsh. much resorted to on account of the virtues of their waters.

ATH, or AETH, a small, but strong and populous town of Hainault, yielded to France by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1668, and then pretty regularly fortified by Vauban; it was restored, however, to the Spaniards, by the treaty of Nimeguen, in 1678. The French, under Marshal Catinat, took it in 1697, but restored it in the same year, by the peace of Ryswick. The allies, under Field-marshal d'Averque, took it Oct. 1, 1706; and Aeth remained in the possession of the Dutch till the year 1716, when it was given up to the emperor, with the rest of the Spanish Netherlands. It is situated on the Dender, 9 miles NW. of Mons.

ATHBOY, a town of Meath, in Leinster, 3 miles SW. of Trim, and 28 NW. of Dublin.

Athelarton, Staff. near Penkridge. Athelhamston, Dorsetsh. E. of Puddleton, near the river Frome. Athelney, or Athelingey, Somersetsh. a river island, consisting of a rising spot of ground, formed by a conjunction of the Thone with the Parret, a few miles below Taunton. Here Alfred resided when the Danes overran England; as the floods of the rivers anciently made this place inaccessible, and the firm ground then was not above 2 acres.

ATHENRY, a town of Galway, in Connaught, 10 miles E. of Galway, and 91 W. of Dublin. It was formerly a place of considerable strength and note, there being numerous ruins hereabouts, of churches and cathedrals, walls and towers.

ATHENS, a city of ancient and modern Greece, formerly capital of Attica, and celebrated for it's learning and arts, it having been the principle academy of the Roman empire. It is now called Setines, or, according to Dr. Chandler, Atbini, and contains about 15,000 inhabitants, who are mostly of the Greek church, and speak a corrupt sort of Greek. It was taken by Mahomet II. in 1455, and is still under the dominion of the Turks; but there are many magnificent ruins, (particularly the parthenon, or great temple of Minerva, in the acropolis; or citadel; and the temple of Jupiter Olympus.) which sufficiently testify it's former grandeur. In it's present state, Athens is a city or fortress, with a thick, irregular wall, standing on the brink of precipices, and inclosing a large area, about twice as long as broad. Some portions of the ancient wall may still be discovered on the outside. The garrison consists of a few Turks, who reside there with their families, and are called by the Greeks Castriana. The rock of the acropolis is lofty, abrupt, and inaccessible, except the front, which is toward the Piræus. Athens is the capital of Livadia, and situated in the Gulf of Engia, 100 miles NE. of Lacedæmon, and 320 SW. of Constantinople. Lat. 38. 5. N. lon. 23. 57. E.

ATHERDREE, a town of Louth, in Leinster, 34 miles NW. of Dublin.

Atherington, Devonsh. near North Tawton. Atherley, or Adderley, Shropsh. near Newport.

ATHERSTONE, a town of Warwickshire, containing about 2500 inhabitants, chiefly employed in the manufactures of hats, ribbons, shalloons, &c. It is situated on, or near, the river Anker, 13 miles N. of Coventry, and 103 NW. of London. Market on Tuesday.

Athleague, in Roscommon, Connaught.

ATHLONE, a town of Ireland, pleasantly situated on the large and beautiful river Shannon. Part of the town stands in Westmeath, on the Leinster side of the river; the other part in Roscommon, on the Connaught side; these are joined by a long bridge of many arches, which is a grand pass between the two provinces. Though Athlone is so advantageously situated for trade and improvement, it yet remains, in many parts, a poor, ruinous, dirty-looking place. On the bridge are some badly-executed figures and inscriptions, celebrating the success of Elizabeth of England, and relating how the rebels in her reign were executed, quartered, and their skulls, &c. stuck upon poles about the country, and at Dublin Castle, and every thing 'with a blessing,' &c. brought into a state of the greatest prosperity. How much of allegiance they owed her may be judged, when it is considered that it was a law in her reign, that if any one killed 'a mere Irishman,' he should be mulcted, or fined; and what were the fruits of such oppressive laws we find in the reigns of the unhappy Stuarts. It is 59 miles W. of Dublin. Lat. 53. 22. N. lon. 8. 41. W.

ATHOL, a mountainous district of Perthshire, forming the northern part of the county, and containing some fine lakes. The chief town is Blair Athol.

ATHOS, or MONTE SANTO, a remarkable mountain of Greece, on a peninsula in the mouth of the Gulf of Contessa. It has a number of churches, monasteries, hermitages, &c. on it's towering ascent, and is inhabited chiefly by Greek monks, who cultivate the olive and vineyards, and are carpenters, masons, &c. leading a very austere life, and living many of them to a great age. It is so lofty, that it is said to cast it's shadow as far as Stalimene, upwards of 40 miles. It is 70 miles E. of Salonichi. Lat. 40. 30. N. lon. 26. 20. E.

ATHE, a neat, little town of Kildare, in Leinster, situated on the river Barrow, through which the boats pass by Carlow, to and from Waterford river. It is 10 miles S. of Kildare, and 32 SW. of Dublin, from which city the grand canal, by one of it's branches extends, and packets, or passage-boats, pass between them daily through the whole extent both ways.

ATLANTIC OCEAN, an immense sea, bounded on the E. by Europe and Africa, and on the W. by America.

ATLAS, GREAT, called by the natives AYADUCAL; and ATLAS, LITTLE, called ERRIFF; a chain of high mountains, in Africa, the former extending from the Desert of Barca to the western coast of Morocco; and the latter, from the Straits of Gibraltar to Bona, in the country of Algiers. They are inhabited almost in every part, and are not of the height and magnitude ascribed to them by the ancients. From these the Atlantic Ocean takes it's name; and from the fiction of Atlas carrying the world on his back, the name Atlas, applied to a book of maps of different parts of the world, is derived.

AZORES, TERCERAS, or WESTERN ISLES, a group of islands, in the Atlantic Ocean, between 25 and 32 degrees of W. longitude, and between 37 and 40 N. latitude; 900 miles W. of Portugal, and as many E. of Newfoundland. They are 9 in number, St. Maria, St. Michael, Terceira, St. George, Graciosa, Fayal, Pico, Flores, and Corvo. They were first discovered in 1439, by John Vanderberg, a merchant of Bruges, who was driven here by stress of weather. On his arrival at Lisbon, he boasted of his discovery; on which the Portuguese set sail, and took possession of them, which they have ever since retained. All these islands enjoy a very clear sky and salubrious air: they are extremely fertile in corn, wine, and a variety of fruits; and they breed large quantities of cattle. No venomous animal, it is said, is to be found here; and ships bound from Europe to America, on touching here, are immediately freed from the vermin that before infested them. Geographers are not determined whether they belong to Africa, to America, or to Europe. These islands are subject to earthquakes; perhaps, it is to these dreadful convulsions, that they owe their origin.

BANDA, the general name of 5 Islands, in the Indian Ocean. They lie between 4 and 5 degrees of S. lat. and between 127 and 128 E. lon. and are denominated Banda, or Lantor, Poleron, Rosinging, Poolaway, and Gonapi. The nutmeg, covered with mace, grows only on 3 of these islands, where there are whole forests of it. These islands are subject to earthquakes, and all very small, the largest, Banda, being scarcely 20 miles in length. They have been entirely subject to the Dutch ever since the year 1609, when they expelled both the English and the natives. They also keep unceasing war against the birds, which, swallowing the seeds whole, they fear might void them, in other islands, in a state capable of vegetation; and they send out parties of their troops thither, on excursions, to discover and extirpate every appearance of the young plants. The islands contain about 5000 inhabitants. The natives use the pith of the sago for bread, and the Europeans, who are settled here, import their provisions from Java, Macassar, or the very fertile island of Bali, as the land will not bring forth any kind of corn. Banda was taken by an English squadron, under Rear-admiral Rainier, March 8, 1796. Lat. 4. 50. S. lon. 128. 5. E.

BASIL, a canton of Switzerland, about 24 miles long and 20 broad, bounded on the NW. by France, and on the other sides, chiefly by the canton of Soleure and the territory of Rhenfelden.

BASIL, BISHOPRICK OF, a considerable principality in the circle of the Upper Rhine, having France on the W. and the Sundgaw on the N. It extends from the Lake Bienne, across Mount Jura, almost to the city of Basil. The bishop is elected by 18 canons, and invested in his temporalities by the emperor.

BASIL, BASLE, or BALE, the capital of the canton of Basil, in Swisserland, is surrounded by thick walls, flanked with towers and bastions. It is divided into two parts by the Rhine; the larger of which is on the side of Swisserland, the less on that of Germany; but they are joined by a handsome bridge. The larger has 3 gates, 6 suburbs, 200 streets, 6 large squares, and 40 fountains, and is partly seated on a hill. The other stands on a plain, and has but two gates, with 20 streets and some fountains. The town-house and paintings are much admired, and the university has produced many celebrated scholars, as Oecolampadius, the Buxtorfs, father and son, Wenstein, Euler, the Bernouillis, &c. The library contains a prodigious number of books and manuscripts, and there is a rich collection of medals, among which are several exceedingly scarce. Basil is the largest, and seems to have been once the most populous town in Swisserland: it is capable of containing 100,000 inhabitants, whereas the number at present is scarcely more than 14,000. The art of making paper is said to have been invented here. They have several manufactories, particularly of ribands, cottons, silk stuffs, painted linens, gloves, and cutlery. The sumptuary laws are very strict at Basil, and no person is allowed to have a servant behind his carriage. In general the burghers' sons receive an excellent education; and it is not uncommon for even the poor sort of tradesmen, to employ their leisure hours in reading Virgil, Horace, Plutarch, &c. It is 175 miles N. by E. of Geneva, and 250 E. by S. of Paris. Lat. 47. 45. N. lon. 7. 34. E.

BATH, a city of Somers. famous, from the times of the Romans, for it's hot springs. They are not only used as baths, but internally ternally as a medicine, and great benefits are derived from them in gouty, paralytic, bilious, and a variety of other cases. Bath is a place of such general resort, that it seems like a great national hospital; it is so far, however, from being a house of mourning, that it exceeds every other part of England in amusements and dissipation: it's buildings are also more elegant and splendid. It is laid out in squares, circuses, crescents, terraces, &c. these are constructed of white freestone, which abounds here, and are executed in an elegant style of architecture. It is seated on the river Avon; but, in it's later improvements, the buildings, rising, one range above another, have nearly reached the summit of the hill, on the declivity of which it stands. The principal seasons of the waters are spring and autumn; and, besides the great infirmary, here are several other hospitals and alms-houses, for the relief and support of indigent patients. Considerable manufactures of cloth are carried on in Bath. It is 12 miles ESE. of Bristol, and 107 W. of London. Market on Saturday.

BENARES, a populous and fertile country, or soubah, of Hindoostan, bounded on the N. and NW. by Oude, and on other parts by Bahar, Allahabad, and Orissa. It is about 120 miles long and 100 broad, and contains the circars of Benares, Jionpour, Chunar, and Gazypour, and produces a revenue of near 400,000l. a year. It was ceded to the English East India Company in 1775.

BENARES, a fine, rich, and populous city, the capital of a soubah of the same name, is built along the N. side of the Ganges, which is here very broad and the banks are very high. It's appearance from the water is very beautiful; several Hindoo temples embellish the banks of the river, and many other buildings, both public and private, are magnificent. The streets are narrow, the houses high and crowded with inhabitants: but the more wealthy Hindoos live in detached houses, with an open court surrounded by a wall. Benares is more celebrated as the ancient seat of Braminical learning, than on any other account; and the same manners and customs still prevail among the people as at the most remote period that can be traced in history, as they most pertinaciously guard against innovations from foreigners. It is 425 miles SE. of Delhi, and 335 NW. of Calcutta. Lat. 25. 20. N. lon. 83. 10. E.

BENGAL, a country of India, in the E. part of Hindoostan, extending from E. to W. upward of 400 miles, and from N. to S. above 300. It is bounded on the W. by Orissa and Bahar; on the N. by Nepal and Bootan; on the E. by Assam and Meckley; and on the S. by the Bay of Bengal. The country consists of one vast plain, of the most fertile soil in the world, which, in common with other parts of Hindoostan, annually renders two, and in some parts, even three crops. It's principal products are sugar, silk, cotton, fruit, pepper, opium, rice, saltpetre, lac, and civet. The Ganges here divides into several streams, and annually, like the Nile, overflows the country. Bengal has been subject, ever since the year 1765, to the English East India Company. It's net annual revenue, including that of Bahar, is 1,290,000l. Calcutta is the capital.

N. lat. and bounded on the W. by Dahomy and the ocean; on the N. by Dahomy and Biafara; on the E. by parts unknown; and on the S. by Loango. The country exhibits many beautiful landscapes; but the air, in some places, is noxious or pestilential, on account of the gross vapours exhaled from the marshes by the heat of the sun. The natives are skilful in making various sorts of dyes, and in manufacturing cottons or calicoes, which they wear and also export. Their king is absolute, and has a great number of petty princes under him, and polygamy is allowed among them. Benin, the capital, seated on the river Benin, or Formosa, is a spacious city; the houses are large and handsome, with clay walls, and covered with reed straw, or leaves; the shops are stocked with European merchandize, as well as with the commodities of the country, and the streets are kept neat and clean by the women. An earthquake happened here in 1773, when the ground was rent in several places, and thrown into confused heaps; a wood, turnpike-road, fields, hedges, houses, &c. were thrown out of their former situations, the bed of the Severn was choked up, and the river devirtd into a new channel, causing for the time a great inundation above, and so sudden a fall below, that many fishes were left on dry land, and several barges were heeled over, till the river, remarkably deep deep at the time, forcing it's way down, overwhelmed or sunk them, and, in three days time, wore a navigable channel thro' a large meadow. Birches, Chesh. BIRMINGHAM, a large town in Warwickshire, long noted for its hardware manufactures. It is no corporation, and therefore free for any person to settle there, which has greatly contributed to the increase, not only of the buildings, but of the trade, which is now no longer confined to small wares, but includes the more massive works of the founders, and also the improved steam engines, by means of which, indeed, they carry on their heavier works, as they have not here any considerable stream of water. The houses have been computed at 7000, and the inhabitants at 60,000, but their number is continually increasing, and the surrounding country, to a considerable distance, especially towards Wolverhampton, seems like a continued town peopled with industrious inhabitants. Birmingham, from the appearance of the houses, the bustle in the streets, and particularly from the continual passing of the stage-coaches, has much the resemblance of the metropolis. It's manufactures are sent to every quarter of the globe, and in cheapness and beauty are unrivalled. A navigable canal was completed from hence to the collieries at Wednesbury, in October, 1769. It stands on the side of a hill, 17 miles NW. of Coventry, and 116 of London. Market on Thursday.

BOHEMIA, a kingdom of Europe, bounded on the W. by Bavaria, Franconia, and Upper Saxony; on the N. and NE. by Misfir, Lusatia, and Silesia; on the E. by Silesia and Moravia; and on the S. by Austria. It is 200 miles in length, and 150 in breadth, is fertile in corn and pasture, and has several forests, in which there is a variety of wild animals. In the mountains there are mines of gold, silver, copper, tin, iron, and lead, and in some parts, precious stones of different kinds are found. The language of the Bohemians is the Slavonic, with a mixture of the German; their profession of religion, the Romish: here are several Protestants and Jews. The capital is Prague. It is subject to the House of Austria.

BOIANO, a town of Moliso, Naples.

BOIS LE DUC, or HERTOGENBÖSCH, a city of Dutch Brabant, capital of a district called Mowery, which comprehends 3 cities and 102 villages. It is seated among morasses, between the rivers Dommel and Aa, 22 miles ENE. of Breda, 45 NE. of Antwerp, and 45 SSE. of Amsterdam.

BOKHARA, the capital of Great Bokharia, Bocharia, or Bucharia, which is a well-cultivated country, of W. Tartary, the ancient Sogdiana, having little Bucharia on the E. Hindooftan and Persia on the S. and a part of Persia and the Caspian Sea on the W. It is a large, populous place, seated on a rising ground: the houses are low, and mostly built of mud, but the caravanseras and mosques, which are numerous, are of stone. Great numbers of Jews and Arabians frequent this place: but the khan seizes on their possessions at his pleasure. It is 100 miles W. by S. of Samarcand. Lat. 39. 15. N. lon. 65. 50. E.

BOLOGNA, anciently FELSINA, a large and rich city of Italy, capital of the Bolognese. It's palaces, churches, and other public buildings, are very numerous, and finished in a superior style of architecture; and, perhaps, no town in the world, Rome excepted, is so rich in paintings. The private houses are well-built, and the city contains about 60,000 inhabitants. They carry on a considerable trade in silks and velvets, which are manufactured here in great perfection: also in crapes, paper, glass, &c. The river Remo, which runs near the city, turns 400 mills for the silk-works; and there is a canal hence to the Po. Bologna is subject to the pope, but the people have preserved their ancient privileges. It is seated at the foot of the Appenines, 22 miles SE. of Modena, and 175 NW. of Rome. Lat. 44. 30. N. lon. 11. 26. E.

BOLOGNESE, a province of Italy, in the pope's territories, bounded on the W. by Modena; on the N. by the Ferrarese; on the E. by Romagna; and on the S. by Tuscany. It is watered by many small rivers, and it's soil is extremely fertile, producing all sorts of grain and fruits, particularly muskadine grapes, which are in high esteem, and oil in immense quantities; hence it's capital is called Bologna the Fat. The country round it, for several miles, seems one continued garden. The vineyards are not divided by hedges, but by rows of elms and mulberry trees, the vines hanging in festoons from one tree to another, in a very picturesque and beautiful manner. Here are mines of alum and iron.

BOMAL, a town of Luxemburg.

BOMBAY, an island of Hindoostan, on the W. coast of the Deccan, 7 miles in length, and about 21 in circumference. The ground is barren, and good water scarce. It was formerly accounted very unhealthy; but by draining the swamps and bogs, the air is improved. It has a capacious harbour, or bay, reckoned the finest haven in the Indies, where whole fleets find shelter and security in all seasons. Besides the town of Bombay, which is about a mile in length, with mean houses, a few excepted; there are other smaller ones upon this island. The inhabitants are of several nations, and very numerous: they have abundance of cocoa-nuts, but scarcely any corn or cattle. It is one of the three presidencies of the English E. India Company, by which their oriental territories are governed, and it is 150 miles S. of Surat. Lat. 18. 58. N. lon. 72. 38. E.

BORNEO, an island in the Indian Archipelago, about 800 leagues in circumference, and divided into several states or kingdoms. It produces aromatic herbs, oranges, lemons, mangoes, pines, palms, &c. in great abundance, excellent mastic, and other gums, wax, rice, cassia, coffee, honey, cotton, camphire, frankincense, musk, aloes, agaric, brasil-wood, sapan, pepper, cinnamon, and other spices: diamonds and gold dust are found in their rivers and sands. Their animals are elephants, buffaloes, oxen, horses, tigers, leopards, bears, monkeys, deer, wild boars, goats, parrots, parroquets, and a great variety of beautiful birds; and they have plenty of sea and river fish. The inhabitants on the sea coast are Mahometans; but in the interior parts, which are but little known, they are Gentoos. In 1772, the English obtained a grant from the Sooloos, of the N. part of the island. On the sea-coast, and near the rivers, the land is usually overflowed half the year by the heavy and continual rains, for which reason some of the houses are built on floats, and others on high pillars. Borneo lies E. of Sumatra and Malacca. The capital, of the same name, large, populous, and built on piles, with a good harbour, is seated on the NW. side of the island. Lat. 4. 55. N. lon. 111. 27. E.

BORNHOLM, an island of Denmark, in the Baltic, about 20 miles in circumference, nearly surrounded with rocks. The soil is stoney, but fertile. Lat. 55. 15. N. lon. 15. 0. E.

BORNOU, an extensive country, in the interior part of Africa, lying to the SE. of Fezzan and Berdoa; between 16 and 20 degrees of N. lat. having the Desert of Bilma on the N.; Nabia on the E.; and Begarmee on the S. Two seasons divide their year. During our summer months they have intense heat, violent winds, deluges of rain, and dreadful tempests of thunder and lightning; but, during the winter of Europe, the ardent heat subsides, the air becomes soft and mild, and the weather serene. They have a great variety of animal and vegetable productions. They cultivate the ground with hoes; the plough being unknown. The country is said to abound in flocks, millet, and cotton, which last they manufacture and wear. Their religious profession is Mahometanism; their government a sort of elective monarchy. In their manners the people are courteous and humane.

BORNOU, the capital of the empire of Bornou in Africa, is situated in a flat country, on the banks of a small river. It is of greater extent than Tripoli; but the houses, though neat, are so irregularly placed, that they can hardly be said to form streets. Their mosques are constructed of brick and earth, and they have schools in which the Koran is taught, as in the principal towns of Barbary. It is 650 miles SE. of Mourzouk. Lat. 19. 40. N. lon. 25. 30. E.

Borrisfooken, in Tipperary, Munster. Borrisfoleagh, in Tipperary.

BORRODALE, in the SE. part of Cumberland; bordering on Westmorland, a romantic valley among Derwent-water fells. These fells or hills are some of the loftiest in England, and it is in one of them that the black lead, or wad, is found where-with almost all the world is supplied: the mines are opened only once in seven years, and when a sufficient quantity of this valuable and singular mineral is taken out, they are carefully closed again. In travelling among these mountains, the idea that presents itself to the astonished spectator, is that of the earth having being in an uproar, like the ocean in a storm; the hills appear like wave rising one behind another, and were it not for the abrupt and sudden scarps, the immense masses of rugged rocks that give the idea of fixedness and stability, the bewildered fancy might be so lost as to imagine they were in a state of undulation, and ready to mingle with each other. The beautiful Vale of Borrodale is watered by the clearest brooks, which precipitated from from the hills, and, forming many beautiful waterfalls, meet together in the dale, and, forming one large stream, pass out of the dale under the name of Borrodale-Beck, when it's waters spread out into an expansive lake, containing several beautiful islands. This lake is called Derwentwater, or Keswick Lake. Borrodaile is 4 miles from Keswick, in passing from which, the traveller has the lake on his right hand, and stupendous, rocky precipices on his left; huge stones, or rugged masses of rock, which have tumbled from above, lie scattered along his way. As he approaches the dale, he sees the ledges of the rocks covered with herbage, shrubs, and trees; villages and farms arise upon his view, the larger cattle are seen feeding in the lower grounds, and the sheep, in large flocks, upon the mountains.

BOSTON, the capital of Massachusetts Bay, in N. America, seated on a peninsula, at the bottom of a fine bay, containing many small islands and rocks. It lies in the form of a crescent about the harbour, and the country within, rising gradually, has a very fine and striking appearance, at entering. There is only one safe channel to the harbour, and that so narrow, that two ships can scarcely sail abreast; but within the harbour there is room for 500 sail to anchor, where they are covered by the cannon of a regular and very strong fortress. At the bottom of the bay is a pier near 2000 feet in length, to which ships of the greatest burden may come close, and on the N. side are warehouses for the merchants. The streets are generally spacious and well built, particularly the principal one, extending from the pier to the town house. On the W. side of the town is the Mall, a beautiful public walk. Besides the state-house, and other public buildings, there are 16 churches, of various denominations. It is 310 miles NE. of Philadelphia. Lat. 42. 25. N. lon. 70. 33. W.

BOSWORTH, or MARKET-BOSWORTH, a town in Leicestershire, remarkable for a battle fought near it, August 22, 1458, between Richard III. and the earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII., in which Richard was slain; and the earl of Richmond crowned in the field. It is seated on a high hill, 13 miles NW. of Leicester, and 106 NNW. of London. Market on Wednesday.

BOURBON, a very healthy, pleasant, and profitable island of Africa, in the Indian Ocean, producing plentifully, with little culture, wheat, oats, and other European grains, rice, Indian corn, sugar-canes, ebony, excellent tobacco, cinnamon, and most kinds of greens, roots, and pulse; as also gums, resins, benzoin, &c. the soil yielding two crops a year. The country is every where well watered, and well stocked with horned cattle, hogs, goats, &c. but the chief production of the island is coffee, which was originally imported from Mocha, and is esteemed better than any of the growth of the West Indies. The French first settled here in 1672, and here their East India ships touch for refreshments. It is divided into eight parishes, riches, whereof St. Dennis is the principal. St. Paul's, on the leeward side of the island, is the next place of note, and is large and populous. The other principal places are Foul Point, Mataman, and Fort Dauphin. There are about 25,000 inhabitants on the island, of which near 18,000 are slaves. It was first discovered by the Portuguese, who gave it the name of Miscarhenas. It is nearly of an oval form, and about 150 miles in circumference. It is 300 miles E. of Madagascar. BRIDGEWATER, a town of Somersetshire, containing about 500 houses, and 3000 inhabitants. The streets are wide and well paved. It stands 12 miles from Start Point, where the Parret runs into the Bristol Channel; from whence a spring tide flows 22 feet at the quay, at which time it rushes with much violence and roaring; the perpendicular height, as it presses along, being several feet. This sudden rage of the tide is called the Boar, and is frequent in all the rivers of the channel, especially in the Severn. Ships of 200 tons burden come up to the town. They import, in large trows, the manufactures of Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, &c. which are conveyed from hence, in waggon, for the internal parts of Devonshire and Cornwall. About 40 vessels, from 30 to 100 tons, are employed in bringing coals from Wales to this place. The duties on custom-house imports amount to about 2500l. a year. It is seated on the river Parrot, 31 miles SSW. of Bristol, and 137 W. by S. of London. Markets on Thursday and Saturday for corn, cattle, &c. and particularly for cheese.

BRISTOL, a city and sea-port, partly in Gloucestershire, and partly in Somersetshire, to which last it was accounted to belong, before it formed a separate jurisdiction. In wealth, trade, and population, it has long been reckoned the second in England; the custom-house receipts for Liverpool, however, have lately exceeded those of Bristol. It is seated at the confluence of the Avon and Frome, about 10 miles from the place where the Avon discharges itself into the Severn. Ships of considerable burden come up to the quays, and their trade is extensive; sending 2000 ships yearly to different parts of the world. The streets are mostly narrow, but here are some elegant squares, and the new parts of the town are magnificent, they are built of stone, and much in the same style as Bath. Like it, they also extend, range above range, till they have nearly reached the summit of the hill, against which the Gloucester side of the city stands. The prospects in the vicinity of Bristol are delightful, and the banks of the Avon, the lofty rocks, through which it finds a passage to the sea, covered with herbage and trees, and presenting the most awful precipices, are highly romantic. They have plenty of coal from King's Wood and Mendip Hills, and the glass houses, founderies, sugar-works, &c. are numerous. They make use of sledges instead of carts, which, from their weight and friction, seem a heavy load in themselves; neither do the horses pull together, the hind horse being perpetually raising the fore part of the sledge, and the fore horses perpetually pulling or pressing him to the ground. It ought to be observed, however, that a part of the town having been built upon a morass, carts and waggons are not allowed to ply there, from the apprehension of their sinking and endangering the buildings. Bristol is 40 miles nearly S. of Hereford, 60 NE. of Exeter, 34 SW. by S. of Gloucester, 50 SSW. of Worcester, 12 WNW. of Bath, and 124 W. of London. Lat. 51. 28. N. lon. 2. 36. W. BROEK, a town and county of Berg, Westphalia.

BROEK, a neat and beautiful village, 6 miles from Amsterdam. The manners of the inhabitants, according to Madame de Sillery, late Countess of Genlis, and Mr. Pratt, are extremely singular. They marry invariably among themselves. In every house they have one door set apart for the occasion of marriage or death. It is called the door of ceremony; the new-married couples enter in at it, and never pass through it again but to their graves; in the interval it is kept constantly shut. The women scarcely ever stir from Broek, and Amsterdam is as little known to them as London or Constantinople. The houses are roofed with tiles so glossy, that in the sunshine they glitter like spar. Their little gardens are adorned with china vases, grotes of shell-work, &c. and their streets are paved with inlay work of beautifully small pebbles, of various forms and colours, squared or diamonded, crossed and intercrossed, with shells, pieces of glazed brick, marbles, glass beads, &c. called in as auxiliaries. Behind their houses and gardens are extensive meadows, with large herds of cattle grazing. Their outhouses are likewise behind, so that waggons, carts, and cattle do not enter their streets, which, except one, (through which they are permitted to pass) are neat, clean, and charming beyond comparison. Every part, also, of every house, within and without, is painted with the most costly colours, and all ornamented with a care, which, it seems, not only profanation, but peril in the passenger, to tread upon or to touch.

BRUGES, a large city of the ci-devant Austrian Flanders, formerly the English staple for wool, and the centre of communication between the Lombards and the Hanseatic merchants. Hither the Lombards brought the products of India, and the manufactures of Italy, and exchanged them for the commodities of the north. It was then the greatest trading town in Europe, every commercial nation of which had a consul here. But, in the 16th century, the civil wars, occasioned by the tyranny of Philip II. drove the trade first to Antwerp, and then to Amsterdam. Bruges is not therefore populous now in proportion to it's extent; but it's situation still commands some trade, as it communicates by canals with Ghent, Ostend, Sluys, Nieuport, Furnes, Ypres, and Dunkirk. It is 8 miles nearly E. of Ostend.

Cadland, Hants, in the New Forest. Cadley, Devonf. W. of Columbton. Cadley, Devonf. near Ottery St. Mary's. Cadnam House, Wilts, near Christian Malford. Cadney, Linc. S. of Glandford Bridge.

CADORA, the capital of Cadorino.

CADORINO, a small and mountainous district of the Trevisan, late a province of Venice.

CADSANDT, an island at the mouth of the Scheldt, famous for it's excellent cheese. Cassandria is the principal place.

CAEN, a city, capital of the dept. of Calvados, containing about 4000 inhabitants. Before the revolution, it was the capital of Lower Normandy, and had a celebrated university, founded by Charles VII. It is situated on the rivers Orne and Odon, (the former of which runs through the town, the tide bringing up large vessels) 65 miles W. by S. of Rouen, and 125 NW. of Paris.

Caergwrley, Flintshire, 7 miles from Chester.

CAERFILLY, a small, straggling town, of Glamorganshire, seated between the rivers Taff and Rumney, 5 miles N. of Landaff. One half of a round tower, here, part of it's large, ancient castle, overhangs it's basis more than 9 feet, and is reckoned as great a curiosity as the leaning tower of Pisa, in Italy. Market on Thursday.

Caer

CAERLEON, a town of Monmouthshire, once the metropolis of all Wales, and the see of an archbishop till the year 521, when it was removed to Menevia, now St. David's. It is situated on the river Usk, 26 miles from Bristol, (to and from which trading vessels sail regularly every week) and 148 W. of London. Market on Thursday.

Caerworrar, Northumberl. N. of the Picts' Wall. Caerwent, Monm. 4 miles SW. of Chepstow. Caerwys, Flintshire, 5 miles E. of St. Asaph, and 5 W. of Flint. Cæsar's Hill, Suffex, near Findon, supposed to have been Cæsar's camp.

CAFFA, a town, the largest in the Crimea, containing 5 or 6000 houses; it is the Thedusia of the ancients, a name which has been restored to it by the Russians. From 1226 to 1474, it was in the hands of the Genoese, when its commerce was at such a height, that it exceeded even Constantinople itself in this particular. It is seated on the Black Sea, 150 miles NE. of Constantinople. Lat. 45. 8. N. lon. 35. 45. E.

CAFFA, or ZABACHE, STRAIT OF, the ancient Cimmerian Bosphorus, uniting the Black Sea and the sea of Asoph.

CAFFRARIA, an extensive country of Africa, divided into Caffraria Proper, and the country of the Hottentots. The former is S. of the tropic of Capricorn, and extends along the Indian Ocean to the mouth of the Great Fish River, in lat. 30. 30. S. By this river it is divided from the country of the Hottentots; its other boundaries are uncertain. The Caffres are tall, active, and robust, and evince great courage in attacking lions, and other beasts of prey. Their complexions are black; their clothing consists of hides of oxen, which are as pliant as cloth. The men employ much of their time in hunting, the women in cultivating the land; they also make earthenware, and curious baskets. The country is fertile, and they have large herds of cattle, which are small, but very docile, coming at a whistle. They have no priests, yet undergo, at 9 years of age, the initiatory rite of the Hebrews. The interior parts are little known.

Caghryariff, in Clare, Munster.

CAGLI, a town of Urbino, seated on the Cantiano.

CAGLIARI, a large city, the capital of Sardinia, containing 5 churches, besides the cathedral, 23 convents, and about 50,000 inhabitants. It has a large and secure harbour. Lat. 39. 27. N. lon. 9. 14. E.

Cabir, or Cabier, in Tipperary, Munster, 8 miles S. of Cashel, and 85 SW. of Dublin. Cabier, in Kerry, Munster, NE. of Valentia Island. Cabircanaway Drungand, in Kerry, Munster; certain high hills, over which a road passes, hanging in a tremendous manner over the bay of Castlemayn, like that on Penmanmawr, in North Wales, except that it is here more stony and dangerous. Cabirconlish, in Limerick, Munster. Cabirconlish, in King's County, Leinster. Cabirconrigh, a conical mountain of Kerry, Munster, rising 700 yards above the level of the sea, and forming a peninsula between the bays of Castlemayn and Tralee. Cabirdonel, in Kerry, Munster. Cabirelly, West, in Limerick, Munster. Cabirkegan, in Cork, Munster. Cabirnee, in Cork, Munster. Cabirmorres, in Galway, Connaught. Cabir Trant, the W. point of Ventry Harbour, in Kerry, Munster.

CAHORS, a town in the dept of Lot, seated on a peninsula made by the river Lot, in a country celebrated for wine, 50 miles NW. of Albi, and 287 nearly S. of Paris, CAJANEURG, or CAJANA, a small town, the capital of E. Bothnia, situated on the Lake Cajania, or Ula, where the river Pytia forms a tremendous cascade. It forms part of a parish, near 60 leagues in length, and 16 in breadth, and is 300 miles NE. of Abo. Lat. 64. 13. N. lon. 27. 45. E.

Cairn Hill, in Meath, Leinster. Cairn-lough, in Antrim, Ulster.

CAIRO, GRAND CAIRO, or EL KAHHERA, the capital of Egypt, consists of 3 towns, about a mile apart, Old Cairo, or Merfa, Mesra, New Cairo, and the Port of Bulae. The inhabitants are about 300,000. Old Cairo is a small place, though it be the harbour for boats that come from Upper Egypt. New Cairo is about a mile from the river, and is 7 miles in circumference. It has 3 or four grand gates, but the streets are narrow, and the best houses are generally built round a court, having their windows within to the inclosed court, and presenting only a dead wall to the street. The calash is a canal which conveys the waters of the Nile into the city; it is about 20 feet broad, and has a house built on each side of it. Here are several public bagnios and caravanferas, and about 300 mosques; the lofty minarets of which present a very picturesque appearance. In the 15th century, this was one of the richest and most flourishing cities in the world; it has since declined, but the Europeans have still their consuls and factors here. It is seated near the E. bank of the Nile, 100 miles S. of it's mouth. Lat. 30. 3. N. lon. 31. 23. E.

CAIROAN, or KAIRWAN, a town of Tunis, only second to that city (from which it is distant 55 miles S.) in trade and number of inhabitants.

CAITHNESS, the most northerly county of Scotland, bounded on the W. by Sutherlandshire; on the N. by the Pentland Frith, which divides it from the Orkney Islands; and on the SE. by the German Ocean. It's greatest extent is 35 miles from N. to S. and 20 from E. to W. The SW. part is mountainous and the abode of wild roes and other animals; the rocky summits shelter eagles, and other birds of prey, and the lakes are resorted to by swans, and various water fowl. On the SW. this county ends in the promontory called the Ord of Caithness. Along the side of this steep hill, impending above the sea, a winding road has been cut, which is the only entrance into this county from the S. The climate is good, and the soil round the coast very improvable: here the English is spoken; but in the Highlands the Erse prevails.

CAKET, a town and country, in the northern part of Persia, near Mount Caucasus. Lat. 43. 32. N. lon. 46. 10. E.

CALABAR, a country of Upper Guinea, with a town and river of the same name, where the Dutch have a factory. Lat. 16. N. lon. 10. E.

CALABRIA, a country of Naples, divided into Ultra and Citra, or Farther Calabria, of which Reggio is the capital, having Calabria Citra on the N. and the Mediterranean on the E. S. and W.; and Hither Calabria, of which Cosenza is the capital, being bounded on the N. by Basilicata, on the E. by the Gulf of Tarento, and on the S. by Calabria Ultra. It is rich in vegetable and mineral productions, but liable to earthquakes. One of the most terrible upon record happened here and in Sicily, in 1783. Besides the destruction of many towns, villages, and farms, above 40,000 persons perished by this calamity. Mountains were levelled, and valleys formed in an instant; new rivers began to flow, and old streams were sunk into the earth and destroyed; plantations were removed from their situations, and hills carried to places far distant. At Scilla, a wave, which had swept the country for 3 miles, carried off, on it's return, 2473 of the inhabitants.

CALAHORRA, a city of Old Castile, situated near the Ebro, on the borders of Navarre.

CALAIS, a sea-port town, in the dept. of Pas de Calais, strongly fortified, and defended with a citadel: it contains 1 parish church, and between 4 and 5000 inhabitants. The streets are uniform and well paved. It is seated among marshes, has an inland navigation, and a harbour for small vessels. In time of peace, packet-boats sail twice a week between Dover and Calais. It is 21 miles ESE. of Dover, and 172 N. of Paris. Lat. 50. 58. N. lon. 1. 56. E.

CALAMATA, a town in the Morea, 13 miles W. of Mistra.

CALAMIANES, a cluster of islands, between Borneo and the Manillas, in the Indian Ocean, N. of Parago. They are 17 in number, and are noted for the swallows' nests that are gathered here for food: these are composed of a viscous matter, found by the birds floating on the sea, which, when dissolved in broth, is accounted a great delicacy. Lat. 11. 0. N. lon. 118. 5. E.

CALCUTTA, or FORT WILLIAM, the emporium of Bengal, and seat of the governor general of India, is seated on the W. side of Hoogly River, at about 100 miles from it's mouth, which is navigable up to the town for large ships. In the beginning, ning of the present century it was a village, but now it is an extensive city, supposed to contain 500,000 inhabitants. The houses variously built, some of brick, others with mud, and a greater number with bamboos and mats, make a motley appearance: and the mixture of European and Asiatic manners observed in Calcutta, is wonderful; coaches, phaetons, hackeries, two-wheeled carriages, drawn by bullocks, palankeens, carried by the natives, the passing ceremonies of the Hindoos, and the different appearances of the faquirs, form a diversified and curious scene. Here the governor general and council of Bengal reside, who have a control over the presidencies of Madras, Bengal, and Bencoolen. The houses have, many of them, the appearance of palaces, or temples, and their inhabitants are very hospitable. The situation of this city is not happily chosen; for it has extensive muddy lakes, and a vast forest close by it, from which, in so hot a climate, unwholesome vapours must arise. Here are four judges, who dispense justice according to the laws of England. Calcutta is 1030 miles NE. by N. of Madras. Lat. 22. 23. N. lon. 88. 28. E.

Caldebeck, Cumb. CANADA, a country of N. America, N. of the United States, extending about 700 miles in length, from NE. to SW. and about 200 in breadth. It is subject to Great Britain, and the religious establishment is that of the church of Rome. By an act of parliament, in 1791, the country was divided into Upper Canada, of which Montreal is the capital; and Lower Canada, of which Quebec is the chief city; and a constitution, partly resembling that of England, was given to each of these provinces. The winter here for 6 months is very severe: the cleared lands are very fertile, and the vegetables various, and corn ripens in two months time, vegetation being always wonderfully accelerated where the season is short. Furs and skins are obtained here in great quantities, (the Canadian merchants having, of late years, interfered greatly, even with the Hudson's Bay Company, exploring numerous nations inland, and sending many large canoes into the interior country). The rivers, lakes, and bays are numerous, large, and deep, and well supplied with fish. Here are several ancient and extensive forests, and the tribes of Indians are numerous.

CANAL, THE DUKE OF BRIDGEWATER'S; a stupendous work, begun in 1758, at Worsley Mill, 7 miles from Manchester, where, at the foot of a mountain, composed in a great measure of coal, a basin is cut, capable of containing all the boats and a great body of water, which serves as a reservoir to the navigation. The canal runs through a hill, by a subterranean passage, nearly three quarters of a mile to the duke's coal works. In some places it is cut through the solid rock; in others arched over with brick. Air-funnels, some of which are 37 yards perpendicular, are cut at certain distances through the rock to the top of the hill. At Barton Bridge, 3 miles from the basin, is an aqueduct, which, for upwards of 200 yards, conveys the canal across a valley, and also more than 40 feet above the navigable river Irwell. There are 3 arches over this river; the centre one is 63 feet wide, and 38 high, admitting the largest barges to pass underneath with their masts and sails standing. At Longford Bridge, the canal turns to the right, and crossing the river Mersey, passes near Altringham, Durham, Grapenhall, and Kaulton, into the tide-way of the Mersey, at Runcorn Gap, whence the barges can pass into Liverpool at low water. This navigation is 29 miles in length; it falls 95 feet, and was finished in 5 years, under the direction of that excellent engineer, M. Brindley. Coals, which, before this canal was finished, were retailed in Manchester, at 7d per hundred weight, are now sold (seven score to the hundred weight) at 3½d.

CANAL, THE GRAND TRUNK, OF STAFFORDSHIRE CANAL, was begun in 1766, under the direction of Mr. Brindley, in order to form a communication between the Mersey and the Trent, and of course between the Irish Channel and the German Ocean. It is 92 miles in length, from the Duke of Bridgewater's canal, at Preston on the Hill, in Chesh. to Weldon Ferry, in Derbyshire, where it communicates with the Trent. It is carried over the river Dove in an aqueduct of 23 arches, and the ground is raised for more than a mile to a considerable height; it is also carried over the Trent by an aqueduct of 6 arches: at Harecastle Hill, it is conveyed under ground a mile and a half; at Barton, in Cheshire, a subterraneous passage is effected of 560 yards in extent, and in the same neighbourhood another of 350: and, at Preston on the Hill, where it joins the duke's canal, it passes under ground 1241 yards. From the neighbourhood of Stafford, a branch is made from this canal, to near Wolverhampton, and to join the Severn near Kidderminster: from this again two other branches are carried, one to Birmingham, and the other to Worcester. Since the establishment of these canals, many other extensive ones have been projected and executed, in most of the inland, and some of the maritime counties.

CANAL, THE GRAND, in Ireland, commences in Dublin, at the west end of the town, and is intended to be carried to the river Shannon. It already communicates with the Barrow, whereby a communication is opened between the metropolis and Athy, Carlow, Ros, Waterford, Clonmel, &c. There are passage-boats daily from the city to Sallans, Monastereven, and Athy, and from these places to Dublin; and vessels carrying goods are continually passing and repassing. The execution of this work was an arduous business; beside having to cut through hard and rocky strata, and construct aqueducts over the valleys and rivers, they had to carry it through a long track of turf-bog, which, for a considerable time, baffled their efforts, as, from its fluid-like consistence, it was pressed into, or filled up, the cut or channel, channel, whenever they ceased digging. These difficulties, however, were surmounted, and the canal itself has proved such a drain to the bog, as to enable the people to reclaim a great extent of it, and bring it under cultivation. By a branch, which has been carried, at an immense expence, by a circuitous course round the S. side of the city, the Grand Canal now communicates with the harbour of Dublin. There are other canals and modes of inland navigation by the rivers and lakes, both in the N. and W. of Ireland. The Royal Canal, on the N. side of Dublin, is not yet completed.

CANAL, THE GREAT, in Scotland, forms the long-wished for junction between the Forth and the Clyde. This bold design, conceived above a century ago, is now successfully executed upon a scale far above the usual dimensions of the largest canals in England, and admits of vessels constructed for foreign trade, provided the breadth of the beam be somewhat less than 20 feet, and their draught of water a little under 8. The extreme length of this canal, from the Forth to the Clyde, is $35\frac{1}{4}$ English miles. In the space of 30 miles it is carried over 36 rivers and rivulets, besides two great roads, by means of 38 aqueduct bridges. In the course of this inland navigation, which may be performed in less than 18 hours, many striking scenes present themselves to view. But above all others, the stupendous aqueduct bridge, over the Kelvin, near Glasgow, 400 feet in length, carrying a great artificial river over a natural one in a deep valley, where large vessels sail along at the height of 70 feet above the bed of the river below, is one of the features of this stupendous work, which gives it a pre-eminence over any of a similar nature in Europe. Yet, however singular and striking this may appear, with respect to picturesque beauty, the utility of this communication between the Eastern and Western Sea to navigation and commerce, is a more important consideration, as it shortens the nautical distance 800, and, in some cases, 1000 miles, and affords a safe and speedy navigation, particularly at the end of the season, to vessels bound to Ireland, or the western ports of Great Britain, that are too long detained in the Baltic, and that cannot attempt the voyage round by the N. Sea, without danger of shipwreck, or the market being lost from delay.

CANAL, ci-devant Royal, or of LANGUEDOC, was begun in 1666, in order to effect an inland communication between the Atlantic and Mediterranean, and finished in 1682. It is carried over 37 aqueducts, and crossed by 8 bridges. From the port of Cette, in the Mediterranean, it crosses the Lake of Thau, and below Thoulouse is conveyed by 3 sluices into the Garonne. The reservoirs of water, collected from the hills for the supply of this navigation, are immense. From one of these, the water is conveyed by 3 large brass cocks, with mouths as large as a man's body, yet though these remain open for months successively, there is no visible diminution of water in the great reservoir. Between Beziers and Gapestan, is the Mal Pas, where the canal is conveyed for the length of 720 feet, under a mountain cut into a lofty arcade, lined with freestone, except where it is a rock. At Adge there is a curious, round sluice, lock, or chamber, with three openings, three different depths of the water or levels meeting here; and the gates are so contrived, that vessels may pass into any one of them by opening the sluice belonging to it. There are 15 locks upon it in the fall towards the ocean, and 45 on the side of the Mediterranean. Regular locks for carrying boats over eminences were first erected in France.

Canalegie, Cornwall, S. of Padstow.

CANANORE, a large sea-port, on the coast of Malabar, ceded to the English by Tippoo Sultan, in 1792. Lat. 12. 0. N. lon. 75. 14. E.

CANTON OF QUANG-TCHEOU, a large, populous, and wealthy city of China, seated on one of the finest rivers in the empire. It is the capital of the province of Quantong, and the centre of the European trade in that country. It consists of three towns, divided by high walls. Temples, magnificent palaces, and courts are numerous. The streets are long and straight, paved with flag stones, and adorned with lofty arches. The houses are remarkably neat, but consist of only one story, and they have no windows to the street. The covered market-places are full of shops. They have manufactures of their own, especially of silk-stuffs. The number of inhabitants is computed at 1,000,000, many of whom reside in barks, which form a kind of floating city; they touch one another, and are so ranged as to form streets. Each bark lodges a family and their grand children, who have no other dwelling. At break of day, all the people who inhabit them, depart to fish, or to cultivate their rice. Lat. 23. 8. N. lon. 113. E.

Cantrebychan, E. of Carmarthen. Cantremew, N. of Carmarthen.

CANTYRE, a peninsula of Argyleshire, 50 miles long from N. to S. and from 5 to 8 broad. Across the isthmus which joins it on the N. to the mountainous district of Knapdale, and which is scarcely a mile broad, it has been usual to draw boats and small vessels, in order to avoid the dangerous navigation round the headland, amid shoals and currents. A canal might easily be cut across it. To the S. the peninsula terminates in a great promontory, surrounded by a group of dangerous rocks, called the Mull of Cantyre. The soil in general is fertile, particularly in the S. parts.

CANVEY, ISLE, Essex, about 5 miles in length, from Hole Haven to Leigh, is often overflowed by the Thames, (which is here 2 miles over) except the hilly part, to which the sheep, that are fed here in great numbers, at such times retire.

CARCASSONE, a town of France, in the dept. of Aude, divided into the Upper and Lower Towns, by the Aude, over which there is a handsome stone bridge. The Upper Town, or the city, is very ancient; the Lower is modern, in the form of a long square, regularly built, and provided with an aqueduct which brings the water of the river to different fountains. Here are manufactures of fine and other cloths. It is 15 miles W. of Narbonne, and 400 S. of Paris.

Carclaw, Cornw. 2 miles from Pentryn. Carden, Chesh. NW. of Malpas. Carden Hall, Cumb. S. of Carlisle.

CARDIFF, a compact and well-built town of Glamorganshire, with very extensive and considerable old walls, and a harbour 3 miles down the river; but vessels of 200 tons burden can come up to the town. This town has a considerable trade with Bristol and other places; and near it are works of cast and wrought iron. A canal, 25 miles in length, has been lately completed, from Cardiff to the iron-works at Merthyr Tydvil. Cardiff is the county-town of Glamorganshire, seated on the river Taff, or Tawe, 3 miles from the Severn, 12 E. of Cowbridge, and 164 W. of London. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

CARDIGAN, the county-town of Cardiganshire, is large, populous, and pleasantly situated on the river Tivy, over which there is a handsome bridge. In it's neighbourhood are iron and tin works, established about the year 1768. It is 33 miles NE. by E. of St. David's, and 225 WNW. of London. Market on Saturday.

CARDIGANSHIRE, a county of South Wales, is bounded on the W. by Cardigan Bay, in the Irish Channel; on the N. and NE. by Merionethshire and Montgomeryshire; on the E. and SE. by Radnorshire and Brecknockshire; and on the S. by Carmarthenshire. It extends 42 miles in length, and 20 in breadth, and is divided into 5 hundreds, which contain 6 market towns, and 64 parishes. The air is milder here than in most parts of Wales. To the S. and W. are plains fruitful in corn; but the N. and E. parts are a continued ridge of bleak mountains, yet there are pastures well stocked with sheep and cattle. Here is also plenty of tame and wild fowl, and it is well supplied with fish from the sea, and from it's own lakes and rivers, near which there is a great number of otters. The mountains abound with lead and silver ore, mines of which have several times been worked to advantage. The principal rivers are the Tivy, Rydal, and the Iſtwith. Cardigan Bay lies on the coast.

Cardingham, Cornw. NE. of Bodmin. Cardington, SE. of Bedford. Cardington, Shropf. between Bishop's Castle and Wenlock. Gardisson, Norf. near Repeham. Cardock Hill, Shropf. near Cardington.

CARDONA, a town of Catalonia, seated on an eminence near the river Cardenero, 40 miles NNW. of Barcelona. A mountain in the neighbourhood yields immense quantities of a salt, of various colours.

CARLOWITZ, a town of Sclavonia, seated on the Danube, 37 miles NW. of Belgrade.

CARLSRONA, or CARLSROON, a town of Blekinge, in S. Gothland, with a harbour, large and commodious, but of difficult entrance, on account of the shoals and rocky sands at it's mouth. The town mostly stands upon a small, rocky island, which rises gently in a bay of the Baltic; the suburbs extend over another small rock, and along the mole, close to the bason, where the fleet is moored. The way into the town from the main land, is carried over a dyke to an island, and thence along 2 long wooden bridges, joined by a rock. The town is spacious, and contains about 18,000 inhabitants; some of the buildings are brick, but generally they are of wood. Here is a dock hollowed out of the solid rock, capable of receiving the largest vessels, and a covered one, whose bottom and sides are of hewn granite; rows of granite pillars support the roof, and bear rather the appearance of a colonade to a temple, than of a receptacle for ships. In 1680, the town was founded; in 1724 the former dock; dock; and in 1779 the latter was completed. According to the original plan, 3 basins and 30 docks, communicating by sluices, were intended, but a century will probably elapse before they can be completed. Carlscrona is 220 miles nearly S. of Stockholm. Lat. 56. 20. N. lon. 15. 25. E.

CARLSTADT, a fortress of Croatia; and a town of Wurtzburg, Franconia.

CELEBES, an island of Asia, in the Indian Ocean, called also Macassar, S. of the Philippines, E. of Borneo, and W. of the Moluccas. The heat would be insupportable but for the N. winds, and the rains which constantly fall five days before and after the full moon, and during two months that the sun is nearly vertical. The fruits are ripe at all times of the year, and in the forests are large herds of deer, wild hogs, and large, ferocious monkeys; the most dangerous are the white, especially to women, whom they seize and tear to pieces. The chief enemies of the monkeys are the serpents, which are continually in pursuit of them; the larger swallowing them whole, and the smaller ensnaring them by art, seizing on them, and drinking their blood. No country in the world is furnished with a greater variety of poisons. The Dutch have several forts and settlements here. The natives are Mahometans, of an olive colour, low of stature, but strong and hardy. The NE point of the island is in lat. 1. 42. N. lon. 122. 14. E.

It produces large quantities of cinnamon, and its pepper is of superior quality. Here is a great variety of wood for all uses; but the most remarkable tree in the island is the tallipot, one of whose leaves will cover 10 men, and protect them from rain. It abounds in corn, rice, elephants, buffaloes, goats, hogs, deer, hares, dogs, jackals, monkeys, tigers, and bears. In some places there are mines, whence are got rubies, sapphires, topazes, and other stones of less value. The Dutch are, or lately were, in possession of all the coast of this fertile island, and to the distance of 10 or 12 leagues up the country. The natives are the Bedas, a hardy race, on the north; and on the south the Cinglases, a people equally inoffensive, but more superstitious; the implore they interposition of their saints and heroes, and have various idols of monstrous forms. They are divided into tribes like the Hindoos, and their language, which is peculiar to themselves, is said to be copious, smooth, elegant, and polite. Lat. from 6. to upwards of 9. deg. CHESHIRE, a county palatine of England, separated on the N. from Lancashire by the river Mersey, but just at the NE. point it borders on Yorkshire, on the E. it is bounded by Derbyshire and part of Staffordshire, on the S. by Shropshire, and a detached part of Flintshire, and on the W. and SW. by Denbighshire and Flintshire, from which latter it is separated by the river Dee: on the NW. it is washed by the Irish Sea, that part of it being a peninsula, about 13 miles in length, and 6 in breadth, formed by the mouths of the Mersey and the Dee. Without including the peninsula, the county extends 35 miles from N.

to S. and 42 from E. to W. It is divided into 7 hundreds, containing 1 city, 11 market towns, and 101 parishes. The air is temperate and very healthy. The soil is rich in pasture and corn land. Immense quantities of cheese are made in this county; but a considerable quantity, of what goes by the name of Cheshire cheese, is made in Shropshire, Staffordshire, and Lancashire. London alone is said to consume 14,000 tons of it; vast quantities are also sent to foreign parts, to Ireland, Scotland, and different parts of England. The manufactures of Cheshire are extensive; and it is noted for its salt springs. The principal rivers are the Mersey, Dee, Weaver, and Dane; and here are several small lakes.

Cheshunt, with its Park and Wash, Herts, near Hoddeson. Here Richard Cromwell, the protector, under the assumed name of Clark, spent many years of a venerable, old age, in obscurity and peace, much to be preferred, no doubt, to all the splendid infelicities of guilty ambition. He first resided here, in 1680, in a house near the church, and here he died in 1712, in his 86th year. He enjoyed a good state of health to the last; and was so hale and healthy, that, at fourscore, he would gallop his horse for many miles together. Chesilborn, Dorsetf. near Middleton. Chesington, Surry, between Elther and Ewel. Chesil Bank, Dorsetf. is composed of gravel and pebbles thrown up in the sea, 9 miles in length; between it and the shore there is a narrow sea, and it connects Portland with the main land. Cheslall, Staff. in Longton parish.

CHESTER, the capital of Cheshire, is a large, ancient, and populous city, containing 9 well-built churches, besides the cathedral, called St. Werburgh's, which looks as antique as the castle. They were both built by Hugh Lupus, nephew to William the Conqueror; unless, as some say, the church was founded by Edgar. It is seated on the Dee, over which there is a noble bridge (having a gate at each end) of 12 arches, by which vessels come from the sea to the quay; and by a canal, lately cut, it has communication with most of the new inland navigations. It has also a constant communication with Ireland, by its packet-boats. Its 3 annual fairs, on Feb. 24, July 5, and Oct. 10, each lasting a week, are the most noted in England, especially for Irish linens. The main streets have a peculiarity of construction; they are hollowed out in the rock to a considerable depth, and the houses have, elevated in front, a sort of covered porticos, which are called rows, and afford a sheltered tered way for foot passengers. The city has 4 gates and 3 posterns, and is 2 miles in compass. It consists chiefly of 4 large streets, which are pretty even and spacious, and as they cross one another in straight lines, meeting in the centre, they make an exact cross, with the town house and exchange, a neat structure, in the middle. In the castle, where the earls of Chester formerly held their parliaments, is a stately hall, somewhat like that at Westminster, where the palatine courts and assizes are held. Chester has a manufactory of gloves and tobacco-pipes, and a considerable traffic of shop goods into N. Wales. It is 182 miles NW. of London. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

CHILI, a large country of S. America, bounded on the W. by the South Pacific Ocean; on the N. by Peru; on the E. by immense deserts, which divide it from Paraguay and other parts of S. America, and on the S. by Patagonia. It is upwards of 800 miles in length, but it's breadth is uncertain. The Spanish colonies are thinly dispersed along the borders of the S. Sea, on a narrow tract extending from 30 to 50 miles in breadth. A profusion of natural productions is seen throughout this country, wherever attempts have been made to cultivate it. The wine made here is palatable and of a good body; and brandy is distilled from it. The northern parts produce olives. The useful animals introduced here from Europe have multiplied surprisingly. Mines of gold and copper are numerous. It is claimed by the Spaniards, but the greater part of it is possessed by the still unconquered and independent natives.

CHILKA, a lake of Hindoostan, on the sea-coast of the province of Cattaek in the country of Orissa, and on the NW. side of the Bay of Bengal. It communicates with the sea by a narrow but deep opening, and is shallow within. CHINA, an extensive empire of Asia, bounded on the W. by mountains and deserts, which divide it from part of Tartary, Thibet, and the kingdom of Ava; on the N. by E. Tartary, from which it is separated by a wall above 2000 miles in length, on which there are about 45,000 towers; on the E. by the Yellow Sea and the Chinese Ocean; and on the S. by the same ocean, Tonquin, Laos, Pegu, and Ava. It lies between 20 and 41 deg. N. lat. and between 96 and 125 deg. E. lon. As this extensive country lies under a variety of climates, it's air is very different. In the S. they are exposed to tropical heats and periodical rains, while the rivers in the N. are generally frozen up for some months during the winter. It is chiefly a flat, open country, but there are some mountains, which are generally well cultivated and covered with trees, and there are mines of iron, tin, copper, quicksilver, gold, and silver. There is abundance of corn, and pulse of all sorts, especially rice; and here are several trees, fruits, and animals, and a great number of simples, peculiar to the country, particularly a plant, called ginseng, a tree that produces peas, differing little from those of Europe; another, bearing a kind of gum, which makes excellent varnish; a third bearing white berries, of the size of a hazel-nut, whose pulp is tallow, of which candles are made; and a fourth, called the white wax-tree, producing that article superior to the common bees-wax. The bamboo-cane grows to the height of an ordinary tree; and though it is hollow within, the wood is hard, and proper for many uses, such as pipes to convey water, boxes, baskets, and the making of paper, after it is reduced into a sort of paste. China is the only country which produces the tea-plant, and supplies other nations with that article, when prepared. There is scarcely a village of China, especially in the S. but what enjoys the benefit of some navigable river, lake, canal, or arm of the sea, and wherever there is a town on shore, there is another of boats upon the water, and many families are born, live, and die there; hogs, poultry, dogs, and other domestic animals, being kept on board the same as on shore. Besides these vessels, there is a prodigious number of floats of timber perpetually passing up and down the rivers and canals, which carry vast numbers of people on them. Some of these floats are a mile in length, and the proprietors build little huts upon them, where they live till they they have disposed of their timber, which they sometimes carry 1000 miles. There is no part of the world where the inhabitants observe the forms of politeness so much as in China; they are perpetually interchanging civilities and salutations: the children shew the greatest respect for their parents, and these shew a great veneration for their ancestors. They are, however, very deceitful and treacherous. The complexion of the Chinese is rather tawney; those are thought to be the most handsome who are the most corpulent. The women are modest, and remarkable for their little feet. Polygamy, and various forms of idolatry, deform this improved country; here are followers of the Lamas blended with the disciples of Confucius. The articles exported from China are, tea, China-ware, lackered-ware, paper, and the water-colour, known by the name of Indian ink, raw silk, cotton, manufactured silks, gold and silver stuffs.

CIRCASSIA, one of the seven countries which lie between the Black Sea and the Caspian, bounded on the N. by the river Don, and on the W. by part of the Black Sea and the Sea of Asoph. They are a nation of mountaineers, who subsist by raising cattle, and fix themselves on the banks of rivers for the sake of pasturage and water. The Circassians are divided into three classes; the princes, the nobles, called usdens, and the vassals, or people. They have never had any written laws, but are governed by a collection of ancient usages. They have few manufactures; their agriculture hardly produces sufficient for their own subsistence. Sheep and horses form a principal part of their commerce, and slaves, which they take in their predatory excursions. Their food consists of a little meat paste, made of millet, and beer made of the same grain fermented. They have both the Bible and the Koran; but, not having letters of their own, those who write their language make use of Arabic characters. This nation has been, of late years, gradually reduced under the dominion of Russia, to which it is now almost wholly subject, and is included in the government of Caucasus.

COMORA ISLANDS, a cluster of Islands in the Indian Ocean, lying opposite to the coast of Zanguebar, in Africa, N. of the Channel of Mozambique, and NW. of Madagascar. They are four in number, Johanna or Anjoan, Mayotta, Mohilla, and Comora or Angazija. Comora, which gives name to the rest, is about 6 leagues long and 3 wide. The mountains are lofty, and richly clothed with wood, chiefly fruit trees; fine streams are numerous, and the grass and trees are green throughout the year. They produce, rice, peas, yams, purilain, cocoa-nuts, plantains, oranges, lemons, citrons, limes) pine apples, cucumbers, tamarinds, sugar-canes, and honey. Their animals are buffaloes, goats, tortoises, cameleons, large bats, hens, and a great variety of birds unknown in Europe. Though Johanna is not the largest island, the Arabs, who have settled here, exact tribute from all the others. They are about 3000 in number, profess the Mahometan religion, and are settled on the sea-coast. The original natives, in number about 7000, occupy the hills, and are frequently at war with them, as are also the natives of the other islands. In the interior part of the island is a lake accounted sacred by the natives; on this there is a number of ducks, which they hold in veneration. Being averse to conduct strangers there, they stipulate that all guns shall be left at a place 5 miles from the lake. The birds being thus kept in safety, become perfectly tame, and fearlessly approach those who go to see them. The Arabian part of the islanders detest this superstition, but dare not forbid the practice of it. The E. India ships often touch here for refreshments. The people on the coast speak English intelligibly. They preserve the language and manners of Arabia, and are not of so dark a complexion as the original natives. The Comora Islands lie between 11 and 13 deg. S. lat. and between 44 and 47 E. lon.

Conna, in Waterford, Munster.

CONNAUGHT, the most westerly province in Ireland, containing the counties of Leitrim, Sligo, Mayo, Roscommon, and Galway. It is bounded on the W. and NW. by the ocean, on the N. by Ulster, and on the E. and S. by Leinster and Munster. It contains 296 parishes, and 95,821 houses, and is 130 miles in length, and 34 in breadth. It has no considerable rivers, beside the Shannon; but has several convenient bays and creeks. It is fertile in many places, but thinly inhabited; but, by the introduction of the linen manufacture, the numbers of the inhabitants are beginning to increase.

CONNECTICUT, one of the five states of New England. It is 73 miles long, and about 44 broad, and is bounded on the W. by New York, on the N. by Massachusetts, on the E. by Rhode Island, and on the S. and SE. by the Sound, which divides it from Long Island. Though subject to the extremes of heat and cold, and to frequent and sudden changes of weather, the country is healthful and the most populous, in proportion to its extent, of any of the United States: in 1790, the number of the inhabitants was 237,946, of which 2764 were slaves. It resembles a well-cultivated garden, producing, with moderate labour, the necessaries and conveniences of life in abundance. The inhabitants are of the religious denomination of Independents. Its principal rivers are the Connecticut, the Housatonic, and the Thames. It contains the counties of Hartford, Newhaven, New London, Fairfield, Windham, Litchfield, Middlesex, and Tolland. The river Connecticut, rises in the N. part of New Hampshire, separating that state from Vermont, enters Massachusetts at Northfield, crosses that state, enters Connecticut about 7 miles N. of Hartford, and after dividing the latter state nearly in the centre, runs into the sea at the NE. end of Long Island Sound. Between Walpole on the E. and Westminster on the W. side of the river, are the great falls, over which a bridge, 160 feet in length, was built in 1784, the first ever erected over this noble river, which is navigable above 40 miles for large vessels, and much farther for small ones.

CONNOR, a town of Antrim, in Ulster, 6 miles N. of Antrim, and 90 of Dublin.

Connor Ville, in Cork, Munster.

Conock, Wilts, 3 miles from Market Lavington. Conondley, Yorksh. W. Riding. SW. of Skipton. Conquest, Somerset in the Vale of Taunton.

CONQUEST, LE, a town in the dept. of Finisterre, with a good harbour and road, situated 10 miles W. of Brest.

CONSTANCE, the name of two lakes that separate Switzerland from Germany. The Upper Lake, or the Boden See, is 15 leagues long, and 6 where broadest. Through this lake the Rhine flows, and then enters the Lower Lake, or Zeller See, which is 16 miles long, and 10 in its greatest breadth.

CONSTANCE, a city of Suabia, pleasantly seated on the Rhine, between two lakes of the same name. It has magnificent public buildings, and once flourished in commerce; but is now much reduced: a dead stillness prevails throughout the town; grafts grows in the principal streets, and the inhabitants scarcely amount to 3000.

CONSTANTINA, a town of Andalusia.

CONSTANTINA, or COSTHINAH, anciently CIRTA, a city capital of a district of Algiers, situated on the river Rumel. It was formerly one of the strongest towns of Numidia: abundance of ruins give evidence of its ancient grandeur. Lat. 36. 50. N. lon. 6. 15. E.

Constantine, Cornw. on a hill between Helston and Falmouth.

CONSTANTINOPLE, the ancient BYZANTIUM, one of the largest and most celebrated cities of Europe, standing at the SE. extremity of Romania, and capital of the Ottoman Empire. It is pleasantly seated between the Black Sea and the Sea of Marmora, on a neck of land separated from Natolia by a strait a mile in breadth. The grand signior's palace, called the Seraglio, is on the sea-side, surrounded by walls flanked with towers, and is 7 miles in circumference, including the gardens. It contains contains, besides the public offices and the apartments of the Sultan and the women, 162 odas, or apartments, for the Janizaries. Fronting the great gate of the seraglio, is the celebrated royal mosque of St. Sophia, built, for a christian church, by the Emperor Justinian, to which the grand signior goes in person every Friday. In the castle of the seven towers, to which an eighth has been added, situated near the Sea of Marmora, state prisoners are confined. The bazars, or markets, are square buildings, covered with domes, and supported by arcades. The number of houses in Constantinople must be prodigious, since 30,000 of them have been destroyed by fire in a day, without greatly changing the aspect of the city. The houses in general are crowded with inhabitants, yet they have a mean appearance on the outside, where there are few or no windows, and the streets are narrow; even the palaces of the grandees have nothing remarkable on their outside, but within they are decorated with splendid and costly ornaments. Here are reckoned 3770 streets and lanes, which are never clean, and the inhabitants are visited by the plague almost every year. The inhabitants have been estimated at 800,000, of which about half are Turks, two-thirds of the other half Greeks, Armenians, and Franks, and the rest Jews. The great square, near the mosque of the Sultan Bajazet, is the place for public diversions, where the jugglers and mountebanks display their tricks. The street called Adrianople, is the longest and broadest in the city. The circumference of the city is by some said to be 15 miles, and by Tournefort 23 miles; to which, if we add the suburbs, it may be 34 miles in compass. The suburb, called Pera, is delightfully situated, and is the place where the ambassadors of England, France, Holland, and Venice reside. Constantinople is built in form of a triangle, and as the ground rises gradually, there is a view of the whole town from the sea, in which the palaces, mosques, bagnios, and caravanserai, rising above the other houses, have a grand effect. The harbour is spacious and convenient. Constantinople is situated 112 miles ESE. of Adrianople, 670 SE. of Vienna, and 1500 ESE. of London. Lat. 41. N. lon. 28. 59. E.

CONSTANTINOPLE, THE STRAIT OF, anciently THE THRACIAN BOSPHORUS, forms the communication between the Euxine or Black Sea, and the Propontis or Sea of Marmora. It is the boundary between Europe and Asia in this part, and is 20 miles long, and where narrowest, a mile and a quarter broad. The adjacent country is remarkably beautiful. On one side of the strait is situated Constantinople, and on the other Sentari, which is considered as a suburb to the city.

CONSTANTINOW, a town in Volhonia, Poland, situated on the river Slucza.

CONTESA, a sea-port of Macedonia, situated at the bottom of a gulf, to which it gives name, at the mouth of the river Strimon.

COPENHAGEN, the capital of Denmark, is the most uniform, and best built city in the north. It contains 4 royal palaces, 1 university, consisting of 4 colleges, 9 churches, and about 4000 houses, mostly built of brick. The streets are almost all broad, and in a straight line, well paved, with a foot way on each side, but too narrow for general use. It was formerly the see of an archbishop; but the Danes have curtailed their prelates of their lands, revenues, and power. The haven is generally crowded with ships; and the streets are intersected by broad canals, which bring the merchandise close to the warehouses on the quays. The city is about 5 miles in circumference, and is seated on the E. shore of the isle of Zealand, 300 miles SW. of Stockholm, and 500 NE. of London. Lat. 55. 41. N. lon. 12. 40. E.

CORDOVA, anciently CORDUBA, a large city of Andalusia, seated on the Guadalquivir, over which is a stone bridge of 16 arches, built by the Moors. Here are 16 parish churches, besides the cathedral, 36 convents, 16 hospitals, 2 colleges, and an ancient palace of the Moorish kings, lately converted into stables for 100 Andalusian horses. The cathedral, which was formerly a mosque, still retains the name of Mezquita. In the square, called the Plaza Major, are splendid buildings, under which are piazzas. There are many orchards and gardens within the walls of the city, and in the neighbouring mountains, there are groves of citron, orange, fig, and olive trees. The trade consists of wine, fruits, silk, and Cordovan leather, and the best horses of Spain are had from it. It is 75 miles NE. of Seville, and 135 S. by W. of Madrid.

CORDOVA, a district or province of Spain, once an independent kingdom, now a part of Andalusia. Also, a town and province of S. America, in the government of Buenos Ayres, little known. Lat. 32. 16. S. lon. 25. 30. E.

CORINTH, or CORANTO, an ancient and celebrated city, situated on the isthmus which joins the Morea to Greece. It is now decayed, the houses being intermixed with fields, orange groves, and gardens, like a village, the inhabitants not exceeding 1300 or 1400; there still remain, however, ruins of temples, and other marks of its former magnificence. The adjacent country abounds with corn, wine, and oil; and, from the castle, seated on the top of an almost inaccessible rock, there is one of the finest prospects of land and water in the world. It is 40 miles NW. of Athens. Lat. 38. 14. N. lon. 23. 18. E.

Coripale, Somerset. W. of Bridgewater.

CORITA, a town of Leon.

CORK, a county of Munster, in Ireland, 84 miles in length, and 62 in breadth, being the largest in the kingdom. It is bounded on the W. and SW. by Kerry and the sea; on the N. by Limerick; on the E. by Waterford and a part of Tipperary; and on the S. by the ocean. It contains 269 parishes, 76,739 houses, and about 416,000 inhabitants. It abounds with excellent harbours, and has many fine rivers, as the Blackwater, Lee, Banon, Ilan, &c. The soil varies; in many parts it is fertile, and the country is pretty populous.

CORK, city of, the capital of the county, and the second in Ireland for extent, trade, and population, containing about 8600 houses, and upwards of 70,000 inhabitants. It is a well-built place, and has improved surprisingly of late years, several broad streets having been lately added, by filling up the canals that ran through them. It is seated on the river Lee, by which it is nearly surrounded, and by means of the different channels, vessels come up into the different parts of the town. It's principal export is salt provisions. During the slaughtering season, which holds from August to the latter end of January, they kill and cure about 100,000 head of black cattle. Their other exports consist of pork, tallow, hides raw and tanned, butter, candles, calves, lambs, and rabbits' skins, wool, linen and woollen yarn, and worsted and linen cloth. The country, adjacent to Cork, is hilly and beautiful, affording extensive and diversified prospects. It is 15 miles from the sea, about 5 nearly S. of Limerick, and 124 SW. of Dublin. Lat. 51. 54. N. lon. 8. 23. W.

CORK HARBOUR, or the COVE OF CORK, one of the best in the world, is about 7 miles below the town, and so spacious and deep, as to be capable of containing the largest vessels, and the most extensive fleets. The entrance is easy, and it is secure from currents and storms.

One side of Cork Harbour is formed by Great Island, which is 4 miles long and 2 broad, and very fertile.

CORNETO, a town in the Patrimonio, 38 miles NW. of Rome.

Cornhampton, Hants, NE. of Rush Waltham. Cornhill, Durham. Cornix, Middl. between Rislop and Moore Hall.

CORNWALL, a county of England, which forms the SW. extremity of Great Britain. It is bounded on the E. by Devonshire; it's other parts are washed by the sea. It's length, from E. to W. is 74 miles; it's breadth next to Devonshire, is about 46, but it soon contracts, and is gradually narrowed into isthmuses: on the SW. it terminates in two promontories, the Lizard Point, and the Land's End. It contains 9 hundreds, and 161 parishes, between 1200 and 1300 villages, and 27 market-towns. From it's vicinity to the sea, it is exposed to frequent storms, but exempted from hard frosts and great heats. There is abundance of rainy and foggy weather; but the inhabitants are seldom troubled with agues or fevers. The spring shews itself in the buds and blossoms sooner than in the other parts of England; but the harvest is later, and the fruits have less flavour than in the midland counties. Here are some uncommon plants, and plenty of sea-herbs, as camphire, eringo, ros folis, &c. It is well situated for the herring and pilchard fisheries, and the inhabitants fully avail themselves of their local advantages. It derives, however, it's chief importance from it's minerals; these consist of tin and copper. The copper-mines are numerous and rich in ore, small quantities of gold and silver have sometimes been found; but it's tin mines are it's greatest source of wealth; for these it has been long famous, and it's coasts have been visited by the Phœnicians and Greeks in very remote antiquity; they were known several centuries before the Christian æra, and have been worked continually ever since. With the metalline ores are found large quantities of mundic and arsenic; many sorts of stones are also found here, particularly moorstone, which is used both in buildings and for millstones, and which, when polished, appears splendid and beautiful; and in the cavernous parts of the rocks are found transparent crystals, called Cornish diamonds, which are very brilliant when well polished. The number of men, women, and children employed in raising the tin ore, washing, stamping, and carrying, is stated by some to amount to 16,000. The principal rivers are the Tamar, Camel, and Fale. As this country was one of the places to which the ancient Britons retreated, the Gaelic or Celtic language was long retained here, and has become extinct but very lately.

Cornwall, Northumberl. near Berwick. Cornwood, Devonshire, between Brent and Plymouth. Cornworthy, Devonshire, between Dartmouth and Torbay.

CORO, a town and gulf of Venezuela, Terra Firma.

COROMANDEL, THE COAST OF, is the eastern coast of the peninsula of Hindoostan, extending from Cape Calymere, in lat 10. 20. to the mouth of the Kistnah, in lat. near 60. 0. N. On this coast lie Madras, Pondicherry, Tranquebar, and other European factories, from which chintz, calicoes, and muslins, with some diamonds, are imported into Europe. There is not a port for large vessels on the whole coast, which is an even, low, and sandy country; and, about Madras, the land rises so little, that it is difficult from the sea to mark the distinction between land and water, unless by the different objects that are on the shore.

COSSACKS, a people inhabiting originally the confines of Poland, Russia, Tartary, and Turkey, between the Jaik and the Dnieister. They are divided into several branches, the Kosakki sa Porovi, or Cossacks on the Boristhenes; the Kosakki Donski, or Cossacks on the Don; and the Kosakki Jaiki, which are the wildest of them all, dwelling in large villages along the banks of the river Ural, or Jaik, and the N. coast of the Caspian Sea. They are now entirely subject to Russia, and the Ukrain, or country of the Cossacks of Boristhenes, is become a government under the name of Ekaterinoslav. The Cossacks are large and robust, have blue eyes, brown hair, and aquiline noses; the women are complaisant to strangers. Their towns are built of wood, like those of the Russians. The Ukraine is one continued fertile plain, producing corn, pulse, tobacco, and honey. It's pastures are immensely rich, and the cattle are the largest in Europe.

COVENTRY, a large and populous city, of Warwickshire, noted chiefly for it's manufactures of silk ribbands, as also of cloths, stuffs, thread, gauzes, camlets, and lastings. The accounts, at present, of it's inhabitants vary from 20 to 30,000 although, by Bradford's Survey of Coventry, made in 1748 and 1749, the houses, appear to have then been 2065, and the inhabitants only 12,117. It has communication, by canals, with Oxford, Lichfield, many other inland navigations, and with the Thames. The story of Leofric, earl of Mercia, and lord of this place, heavily taxing the citizens, and only remitting them at the entreaty of Godina, his wife, on condition of her riding naked through the city, which he thought the would never submit to; but which, it is said, she performed, with her long hair so disposed as almost wholly to cover her body, is commemorated till this day, by the figure of a man peeping down into the street from one of the houses. On that extraordinary occasion, all the doors and windows were shut, and Camden says, that nobody looked after her. The tradition, however, is, that one would needs be peeping, and that he was thereupon struck blind. The inhabitants celebrate this event by the exhibition of a mock procession annually. CROMARTY, a tolerably fertile, and, of late years, well-cultivated county of Scotland, comprehending part of a peninsula, on the south coast of the Frith, to which it gives name. On the S. and W. it is bounded by Ross-shire; and on the E. by the Frith of Murray. It is 12 miles long from E. to W. and about 3 miles in its greatest breadth. Its capital, CROMARTY, has a manufacture of hempen cloth, which employs about 200 persons, and a considerable coasting trade in corn, thread, yarn, fish, and skins. It is situated at or near the entrance of the Frith of Cromarty, the most safe, extensive, and commodious bay, or harbour, of Scotland, and one of the finest in Europe, or the world. This truly excellent, but much neglected harbour, the Portus Salutis of the Romans, is about 22 miles in length, and, in some parts, 4 in breadth: the entrance is narrow and bold, being formed by two huge, lofty rocks, which project into the sea till they approach within a mile of each other, and, therefore, defend this fine bay completely from winds and storms. These rocky promontories, or islands, thus approaching each other, and having, also, a similar appearance, are called by the natives, The Sooters of Cromarty, which, in the Scottish language, means wooers, or lovers. Such, in fact, is the vast extent of sea-room in this bay, and such its length, depth, and breadth, that almost the whole British navy might ride with safety within it; and the state of the shore, or anchorage ground, on both sides, for several miles up, is so favourable and smooth, that were a vessel driven from her cables and cast ashore, there would be little or no damage incurred. In violent easterly winds, when no vessel can venture to look into any port of the E. coast of Scotland, from the Frith of Forth northwards, all vessels, thus situated, flock into this bay. It will appear of still greater importance, when it is known, that from Wick, in Caithness, to this frith, a distance of 60 miles, the shore is bold, rocky, and utterly unadmissible to sea-vessels of any size, the waters of Dornoch excepted; which, however, are of no great utility to navigation, by reason of shallows and quicksands.

CUBA, a West India island, near the entrance of the Gulf of Mexico, about 700 miles in length, and 70 in it's mean breadth, subject to the Spaniards. Round the coast are many convenient harbours; and several forts of mines among the mountains. Here are large forests abounding with game, and extensive pastures, which feed large flocks and herds of horned cattle, sheep, and hogs, originally brought from Europe, and which now run wild. The hills run through the island from E. to W. and from these fall many rivulets, which run to the N. and S. The land is generally level near the coast. The produce is that of sugar-canes, ginger, long pepper, cassia, wild cinnamon, excellent tobacco, called by the Spaniards, cigarros, aloes, mastic, cassia fistula, manioc, maize, cocoa, and some coffee. Here are cedar trees so large, that canoes made of them will hold 50 men; also oaks, firs, palms, cotton trees, ebony, and mahogany. Havannah is the capital, where the galleons rendezvous that return annually to Spain.

CUMBERLAND, a maritime county of England, bounded on the W. by the Irish Sea and Solway Frith; on the N. by Scotland; on the E. by Northumberland, Durham; and Westmorland; and on the SW. and S. by the sea and Lancashire. It is 58 miles in length from SW. to NE. and it's greatest breadth, from E. to W. is about 45 miles. It contains 1 city, 15 market towns, and 58 parishes. The air is cool; the mountains are large and lofty, feeding numerous flocks of sheep; and the valleys and plains are well cultivated. From the coal-pits on the coast, Ireland is principally supplied with fuel; this trade constantly requiring a great number of ships and mariners. The property here, both in lands and shipping, is more equally divided than in most other countries. Besides the coal mines, there are others of lead, copper, blue slates for covering the roofs of houses, lapis calaminaris, and of black lead, a mineral almost peculiar to this county, and produced here in quantities sufficient to supply all Europe. This county, and the adjoining one of Westmorland, are celebrated for their lakes, and the beautiful romantic scenery, which their banks, and the adjacent country, exhibit. They have often afforded subjects for the pen and pencil, and a visit to the lakes has of late become a fashionable tour. See BORRODALE, BUTTERMERE, &c.

The soil is fertile, but subject to long droughts, and there are numerous springs, but no rivers. The Cypriots are, in general, tall and well made; many of them live to a very advanced age: their women have fine eyes, but, in other respects, are far from being beautiful; they do not, however, degenerate from their ancestors, as votaries of that goddess, whose favourite habitation this isle was supposed to be. It abounds with game, and great numbers of ortolans, boiled and pickled in vinegar, are annually exported. The chief produce is cotton, silk, and wines: the annual amount of the former, is from 3 to 5000 bales, that of the silk is about 25,000; and the wines amount to near 40,000 gallons. The other exports are wool, nutmegs, turpentine, madder, kermes, opium, coloquintida, salt, umber, green earth, and a small quantity of cochineal. Nicosia is the metropolis of the island.

DAMASCUS, now called SHAM, a very ancient city of Syria, and the capital of a pachalic, is built in the form of an oblong ſquare. Streams of clear water run acroſs the plain of Damascus, which fertilize the gardens, ſupply the public fountains, and run into every houſe. The caravanſeras have long galleries, ſupported by marble pillars, ſurrounding a large court. The private private houses, which are built of wood, have their fronts inwards, inclosing a court, and presenting a dead wall to the streets, although often richly adorned within. The castle is like a little town, having it's own streets and houses. The mosques are superb and numerous. The straight street, which runs across the city and suburbs, in a direct line, has shops on each side, where all sorts of merchandize are sold. The gardens and orchards extend several miles round, and are embellished with summer-houses, turrets, fountains, cascades, and streams of water. A manufactory of cutlery is carried on here. Damascus stands on the river Barida, in a very fertile plain, extolled by the Arabs, who speak of it with enthusiasm, as the best watered, and the most delicious of all Syria, and contains about 80,000 inhabitants, of whom 15,000 are Christians. It is 112 miles NNE. of Jerusalem. Lat. 33. 45. N. lon. 37. 0. E.

DANTZICK, a large, rich, and commercial town, in Prussian Pomerania, with a fine harbour, and a university. The houses are 6 or 7 stories high, and the granaries, containing vast quantities of corn and naval stores, to which the ships lie close, are still higher. It is reckoned to contain 200,000 inhabitants, though there died of the plague, in 1709, above 30,000 persons. It is now subject to the king of Prussia, having been annexed to his dominions in 1793. It is seated on the western bank of the Vistula, about 4 miles from the Baltic, 68 miles WSW. of Konigsburg, and 160 NW. by N. of Warsaw. Lat. 54. 22. N. lon. 18. 38. E.

DANUBE, towards the mouth called ISTER, by the ancients, a river of Europe, rising in, and running through, the circle of Suabia, passing by Ulm, then through Bavaria and Austria, passing by Ratibon, Passau, and Vienna: it then enters Hungary, passing on to Presburg, Buda, and Belgrade, after which it divides Bulgaria from Morlachia and Moldavia, falling into the Black Sea, by several channels, in the province of Bessarabia. It begins to be navigable for boats at Ulm; receives several large rivers as it passes along; is so deep between Buda and Belgrade, that the Turks and their enemies have had men of war on it; yet there are cataracts on it, both above and below Buda, which prevent it's being navigable either way in that part.

Dargle, a romantic vale, or glen, in the county of Wicklow, about 10 miles from Dublin. The lofty mountains on each side are clothed with trees down to the edge of the river, which noisily rumbles from rock to rock in the bottom, forming many cascades; and the views from the eminences are grand and beautiful.

DARIEN, an isthmus, or narrow country which joins N. and S. America, having the Atlantic on the NE. and the Pacific on the SW. It extends about 360 miles in length, and from 48 to 135 in breadth. It is generally considered as a province of Terra Firma, though it seems to be a part of N. America, and is of great importance to the Spaniards, as the wealth of Peru is brought annually to Panama and Porto Bello, and thence exported to Europe. Here are many high mountains, and the low grounds are frequently overflowed with the heavy rains. The natives build their houses with hurdles, plaistered over with earth, and have plantations along the banks of the rivers. The girls pick and spin cotton, and the women weave it; and the men fabricate very neat baskets with canes, reeds, or palmetto-leaves dyed of several colours. Polygamy is allowed among them.

DARIEN, a large river of the province of Darien, which empties itself into the Gulf of Darien, in the Spanish Main, in lat. 8. 40. N.

DARIEN, a town of Georgia, in N. America.

Darien's Bridge, in Cavan, Ulster.

DARKING*, a town of Surry, noted for corn and fowls. The custom of borough English prevails in this manor. It is seated in a healthy air, on a soft, sandy rock, near the river Mole, 23 miles SW. of London. Market on Saturday; and a large fair on May 23, for lambs.

Darlaston, Shropf. near Prees. Darlaston, Staff. near Stone. It communicates with all the late inland navigations. Darleton, Nott. NE. of Tuxford. Darley, near Derby. Darley, Yorkf. W. DARTFORD, a town in Kent, seated on the river Darent, near it's influx into the Thames, which is a harbour for barges, 7 miles W. of Gravesend, and 16 E. by S. of London. It is full of inns and public houses, from it's being a great thoroughfare on the road from London to Canterbury. Market, chiefly for corn, on Saturday.

DARTMOUTH, a town of Devonshire, with a safe haven, capable of sheltering 500 sail of ships. It is seated at the mouth of the Dart, which river rises at the foot of Dartmoor hills, (an extensive moorish tract, feeding great numbers of black cattle,) and after passing Totness, where it is navigable for small vessels, is joined by the Hareborn, 7 miles above it's fall into Dartmouth Haven. The town, which is about a mile long, stands on the side of a craggy hill, with streets very irregular, sometimes two or three, one above another: yet the houses are generally very high. The harbour is defended by three castles, besides forts and block-houses; and here is a large quay, with a spacious street before it, inhabited by some considerable merchants. Dartmouth has a considerable trade to Italy, Spain, Portugal, &c. and to Newfoundland, as well as a share in the coasting traffic. It's pilchard and foreign fisheries employ near 3000 men. It is 30 miles nearly S. of Exeter, and 204 W. by S, of London. Market on Friday for corn and provisions; and one almost every day for fish.

Cornwall, between St. Maw's and Fowey.

DEAD SEA, or LAKE ASPHALTITES, in Palestine, abounding in bitumen; it contains no verdure on it's banks, nor fish in it's waters. The cause which deprives it of vegetable and animal life, is the extreme saltness of the water, which is infinitely stronger than that of the sea. It is not true, however, that it's exhalations destroy birds flying over it, as it is very common to see swallows skimming along it's surface. Fragments of sulphur and bitumen, and mines of fossil salt, are found in the mountains, which extend along the shore. The Jordan runs into it, without any visible discharge for it's waters.

DEAL, a sea-port in Kent. Here are about 1000 houses, and 4500 inhabitants, who are chiefly supported by the resort of mariners hither from the Downs. It is 7 miles S. by E. of Sandwich, and 72 E. by S. of London. Market on Thursday.

DEAN, GREAT DEAN, or MICHEL DEAN, a town of Gloucestershire, in the Forest of Dean, 11 miles W. of Gloucester, and 112 WSW. of London. The Forest comprehends that part of the county which lies between the Severn and the shires of Monmouth and Hereford. It contains 4 market towns and 23 parishes, is fertile in pasture and tillage, produces fine oaks, abounds in orchards, and has rich mines of iron and coal. A few solitary deer still run wild in it's recesses. Market on Monday.

DELAWARE, one of the United States of N. America, bounded on the N. by Pennsylvania; on the E. by Delaware River and Bay; and on the S. and W. by Maryland. It is about 90 miles long, and 20 broad; and, in 1790, the inhabitants were computed at 59,094. In many parts it is unhealthy, being seated in a peninsula, where the land is low and flat, which occasions the waters to stagnate, and subjects the inhabitants to intermittent fevers. It is divided into the counties of Newcastle, Kent, and Sussex.

DELAWARE, a river of N. America, which rises near the Katkhl Mountains, in the State of New York, and in it's course separates the state of Pennsylvania from those of New York and New Jersey, and a few miles below Philadelphia, separates the state of Delaware from Jersey, till it loses itself in Delaware Bay. From the mouth of the Bay to Philadelphia, a course of 118 miles, it is navigable all the way for large vessels.

DELAWARE, a bay of N. America, which is 60 miles long, from Cape Henlopen to the entrance of the river Delaware at Bombay Hook. It is so wide in some parts, that a ship in the middle of it can scarcely be seen from the shore, and the Capes Henlopen and May are 18 miles apart.

DELHI, a province of Hindoostan. bounded on the W. by Moultan: on the NW. by Lahore; on the E. by the countries of Thibet and Oude; and on the S. by Agra and Agimere. The natural fertility of the soil of this province, and the mildness of it's climate, are such as to favour the most numerous population; yet, having been the seat of continual wars for more than 70 years past, it is almost depopulated; the lands lie waste, and the inhabitants provide only the bare means of subsistence lest they should attract the notice of those whose trade is pillage. It is about 165 miles in length and 140 in breadth.

DELHI, the capital of the province of Delhi, was once a large, rich, and populous city, and the capital of the Mogul empire. But, in 1739, when Nadir Shah, or Kouli Khan, invaded Hindoostan, he entered Delhi, and dreadful were the massacres and calamities that followed: 200,000 of the inhabitants perished by the sword; and plunder, to the amount of 60,000,000. sterling, was collected and carried away. They endured similar disasters on the subsequent invasions of Abdalla, king of Candahar; so that, since the decline and downfall of the Mogul empire, the population is extremely low. The late residence of the Mogul is a magnificent palace, built of red stone, about 1000 ells in length and 602 in breadth, and which cost 10,500,000 rupees. Lat. 28. 37. N. lon. 77. 40. E.

DENMARK, a kingdom of Europe, bounded on the W. by the Ocean, on the N. and E. by the Baltic Sea, and on the S. by Germany and the Baltic. The country is generally flat, and the air is rendered ed foggy by the seas and lakes; but, the weather being changeable, it is purified by frequent breezes. Denmark, properly so called, consists of Jutland and the Islands of Zealand and Funen, with the little isles about them; but the king of Denmark's dominions contain the kingdom of Norway, and the duchies of Holstein, Oldenburg, and Delmenhorst, in Germany, besides Iceland, and the other Danish settlements abroad. The revenues are computed at 1,400,000*l.* a year, which arise from the crown lands and duties, and the tolls paid by vessels passing between the Baltic and German Ocean. There is no larger river in Denmark, but numerous lakes and channels of the sea, by which it is intersected. In the summer the heat is great, and the days are long; but the winter continues 7 or 8 months. The commodities are corn, pulse, horses, and large beeves, together with the produce of their manufactures. The exports exceed the imports to the amount of 55,000 crowns a year. Copenhagen is the capital.

DERBY*, the county-town of Derbyshire, is large and well built, with a spacious market-place and handsome town-house. In 1734, a machine was erected here by Sir Thomas Lombe, for the manufacturing of silk, the model of which he brought from Italy. It was the first of it's kind erected in England; and it's operations are to wind, double, and twist the silk, so as to render it fit for weaving. Here are also manufactories of silk, cotton, and worsted stockings, and of elegant porcelain, which last is in high estimation. Derbyshire and foreign marbles are wrought here in vases, urns, columns, and other ornamental articles, and the lapidary and jewellery branches are executed with great neatness. The malting business, and a pottery of queen's earthenware are also carried on here. The number of inhabitants in it's five parishes is estimated at 8593. It is seated on the river Derwent, which is navigable to the Trent, 36 miles N. of Coventry, and 120 NW. by N. of London. Markets on Wednesday and Friday.

DOMINGO, ST. or HISPANIOLA, the richest of the Caribbee Islands in the W. Indies. It is 350 miles in length and 110 in breadth; and the climate, though hot, is healthy, except to new comers. The country is uncommonly fruitful, and beautifully diversified with hills and valleys, woods, and rivers; it is also well stocked with fruit trees, and produces coffee, sugar, indigo, tobacco, salt, cotton, ginger, gums, wax, honey, and drugs. It's coasts and rivers are well supplied with fish and turtles; and the animals brought here from Europe have multiplied prodigiously, supplying provisions, hides, and tallow. There are also mines of gold, talc, and crystal. The Spaniards have held the eastern part of this island, including about two thirds of the cultivable soil, upwards of three centuries; yet, from the indolence of the people, they had only 14,000 blacks, or mulattoes, of which 7 or 8000 are slaves, and no plantation of consequence, the colony even costing their government 250,000 dollars annually, while the exports from the French or western part, prior to the present war, exceeded in value those of all the British Islands in the West Indies, taken together. In 1788, the population, &c. of the French part of this invaluable island stood thus: 30,826 white inhabitants, besides troops, 24,848 mulattoes and free negroes, 434,429 slaves, 793 sugar estates, 3150 indigo ditto, 789 cotton plantations, 3117 coffee estates, 54 cocoa ditto, 520 water-mills, 1639 cattle-mills, 46,823 mules, 36,782 horses, 243,682 head of cattle, &c. and all this within the space of 70 years, as it could only be said to be a colony since 1718, when when the throne of Spain was secured to the Duke of Anjou. The whole of the island, by the treaty of 1795, has been ceded to the French. It lies between Jamaica and Porto Rico.

DOMINGO, St. a large city, capital of the late Spanish part of the Island of St. Domingo. The streets are spacious, and straight as a line. Ten of these run from N. to S. and ten others from E. to W. The greatest part of the houses first built, are of a sort of marble found in the neighbourhood, and in the style of the ancient towns of Spain and Italy. It is seated on a navigable river, and has an excellent port, or harbour, magnificent in every respect, being a real, natural basin, with a great number of careenings for the vessels that can get at them. There is a rock, however, at the entrance, which will only admit vessels drawing 18 or 20 feet water. This rock, it is said, might be easily removed. Lat. 18. 20. N. lon. 70. 10. W.

Dominic, St. Cornw. N. of Saltafh.

DOMINICA, an English West-India island, about 29 miles in length and 16 in breadth. It yields coffee, indigo, ginger, and other articles of West-Indian produce, but the soil, being thin, is more adapted to the rearing of cotton than sugar. In the woods are innumerable swarms of bees, which produce great quantities of wax and honey, and the island is well supplied with rivulets of water. It is divided into ten parishes. The only towns of note are Charlotte Town, or Rousseau, on the SW. side of the island, and Portsmouth, at the head of Prince Rupert's Bay. From January 5, 1787, to January 5, 1788, the exports amounted to the value of 302,987l. 15s. There is no considerable bay or harbour, but the anchorage round the coast is commodious and safe, and ships find shelter under it's capes. It lies about half way between Guadaloupe and Martinico. Lat. 15. 32. N. lon. 61. 23. W.

DRESDEN, capital of the electorate of Saxony, and one of the handsomest cities in Germany. It is situated at the conflux of the rivers Elbe and Weseritz, and divided into the Old and New Town, which are joined together by a bridge, 685 paces long, and Frederickstadt. Old Dresden, or Neustadt, owes it's origin to a chateau built by Charlemagne, in 808. The houses are built of freestone, and generally of the same height; the streets are broad and well paved, the squares spacious, and the palaces and public buildings elegant and numerous. Here are extensive barracks, the menagerie, china manufacture, &c. The library, cabinets, gardens, &c. of the elector are extensive and curious. Here is also a college, or university. Lat. 51. 10. N lon. 13. 50. E.

DRUSES, a people of Syria, on the mountains Libanus and Antilibanus, governed by particular princes, called Emirs. They are very friendly to Europeans, worship the images of saints like Roman Catholics, yet observe the fast of Ramadan, and offer their devotions both in Mahometan mosques and Christian churches. Some of them admit circumcision, but others reject it. They are a strong and robust people, of an active, enterprising character, and accustomed, from their infancy, to fatigues and hardships. Their language is pure Arabic.

Druslwyn, Carmarthens. Druxton, Heref. between Morehampton and Aconbury.

DUBLIN, the capital of Ireland, in the county of the same name, is a large, handsome, and populous city, seated on the river Liffey or Anna Liffey. The appearance of this metropolis, the Bay of Dublin, and the surrounding country, on approaching them from the sea, is grand and beautiful; after passing the Isle of Lambay, and that of Ireland's Eye, which is small, being a lofty and grotesque-looking rock, and the craggy mountain of Howth, in coming from the north; or, after passing the rocky cliffs of Bray, in approaching from the south, the extensive Bay of Dublin opens on the view; on the left are seen the hills and mountains of Wicklow; on the right, the gently rising shores of Clontarf; the city, on a rising ground, at the extremity of the bay, and at several miles distance, with domes and spires, terminates the view. The Cassock, a beautiful pharos, or light-house, 4 or 5 miles from the city, seems, like another Eddystone light-house, to rise out of the sea; from this, however, there is a broad and firm wall, or pier, nearly completed, reaching to Ringsend, to which the city is now nearly extended. On the N. side of the wall is the harbour where vessels lie safe at anchor with an open sea to the N. On the S. side of the wall, near the town, are wharfs principally used for bathing; and between these and the opposite shore is an extensive and smooth strand, which is dry at low water; there is a wharf also on the N. side of the river, for the purpose of bathing, and elegant-baths on both sides of the water. From Ringsend upwards, through the whole city, the river is embanked with quays on both sides; as these are open nearly through their whole extent, they form beautiful walks of very extensive range. The docks laid out on each side of the river, are sufficiently capacious to hold several thousands of vessels. The streets of Dublin are pretty regular, and well-paved, the squares spacious and elegant, and the public buildings superb. The town is supplied with water by means of pipes. A circular road, about 10 or 12 miles in length, encompasses the city, and the country around it is pleasant. There is not yet in Ireland, as in England, a parochial provision for the poor; but there are, throughout the country, institutions for their relief, supported by voluntary contributions. Of this sort is the House of Industry in Dublin. The trade of Dublin is extensive, and since the emancipation of the country from the dominion of Great Britain, it has increased surprisingly, and is still improving; but the bar at the entrance of the harbour renders the approach of large vessels difficult and dangerous. Some improvements, however, are projecting to remedy this great defect. Lat. 53. 23. N. lon. 6. 17. W.

DUBLIN, a county of Ireland, in Leinster, 25 miles in length and 16 in breadth, bounded on the N. by Meath, on the E. by the Irish Channel, on the S. by Wicklow, and on the W. by Meath and Kildare. The soil is rich and fertile in corn and pasture. It contains 137 parishes, 20 of which are in the city of Dublin, 4 market towns, and about 26,000 houses.

DUKE OF YORK'S ISLAND, in the S. Pacific Ocean, WNW. of the Isles of Danger, E. of New Guinea, and N. of the Friendly Isles, was discovered by Commodore Byron, in 1765. It is uninhabited; except by land-crabs and by sea-fowl, which last were so unacquainted with man, as not to fear any mischief from him, permitting the seamen to come so near them as to knock them down. Lat. 8. o. S. lon. 172. 30. W.

DUKE OF YORK'S ISLAND, in the S. Pacific Ocean, between Lord Howe's Group, and the SE. point of New Ireland, is about 10 miles long, of moderate height, and flat, and so fertile as to represent a perfect garden. The huts of the natives are made of bamboo, with fences before them, within which the ground is well cleared and trodden. In the inclosures, the plantain, banana, yam, sugar-cane, &c. are cultivated: beside these, the island produces beetle-nuts, mangoes, bread-fruit, guavas, and some nutmeg-trees. The animals are dogs, hogs, and poultry. The natives are stout, of a light copper colour, and go without clothes: none are seen with their hair of it's natural colour; they dress it with grease and powder. They chew the beetle, and use it with the chenaw, and a leaf, as practised in the E. Indies, by which their mouths appear red, and their teeth, in time, become black. The only musical instrument among them is composed of several hollow reeds, of different lengths, fastened together, like the syrinx of the ancients. Their canoes are neatly made, and have an outrigger. Lat. 4. 7. S. lon. 152. 42. E.

Dukepull, Northumb. SW. of Hexham. Dukes, Essex NE. of Great Braxted. Dulas, on the NE. side of the Isle of Anglesey, on a bay and river of the same name, is much frequented on account of the corn and butter trade. Near it is a red, ochery earth, fit for painting, and veins of lead ochre, and upon all the coast they make fern ashes. Dulas, the name of several rivers in Wales; two of Carmarthenshire; one of Brecknockf. one of Radnorf. two of Montgomeryf. and one of the Isle of Anglesey.

Dulwich, Surry, in the parish of Camberwell, 5 miles S. of London. Here is a college endowed for a master and warden, 4 fellows, 6 poor men, 6 poor women, and 12 poor boys. It was founded by Edward Alleyn, a comedian in Elizabeth's reign, in fulfilment, as it is said, of a vow he had made on receiving a fright in personating one of Shakespeare's devils.

DUMBARNY, a parish of Perthshire.

DUMBARTONSHIRE, anciently LENNOX, a county of Scotland, bounded on the W. by Argyleshire and Loch Long; on the N. by Argyleshire and Perthshire; on the E. by Perthshire and Stirlingshire; and on the S. by the counties of Lanerk and Renfrew. It's greatest length is 45 miles, it's breadth from 6 to 15. The W. part of this county abounds with morasses; in other parts it is fertile in corn and and pastures; but the principal riches arise from the fisheries in the lochs in and about it's coasts. The principal of these is Loch Lomond. It's capital, DUMBARTON, is a large, ancient town, containing about 2000 inhabitants. It's principal manufacture is crown and bottle glass, but many of the young women are employed in the neighbouring print fields, on the banks of the Leven. Close to the river, is a castle built on a vast rock, formerly deemed impregnable. This town was erected into a royal burgh by king Alexander II. in 1221. About 2000 tons of shipping belong to this place, which has a harbour for large brigs, secure in all weathers. It is situated at the confluence of the rivers Leven and Clyde, 15 miles NW. of Glasgow.

DUMBARTON, a town of New Hampshire.

DUMBLAIN, a town and parish of Perthshire, 4 miles N. of Stirling.

Duncormack, in Wexford, Leinster.

DUNDALK, a sea-port and assize-town of Louth, in Leinster. It consists of a wide street, nearly a mile long, and some cross lanes; has a good market-house, and carries on a manufacture of muslins, lineas, and cambrics. It is most advantageously situated for an extensive inland trade, and the port is very safe for shipping. The bay, also, has good moorings, and abounds with fish. Dundalk is 18 miles N. of Drogheda, and 40 of Dublin.

DUNDEE, a large and flourishing town in the shire of Angus, with manufactures of glass, coarse linen, sail-cloth, cordage, coloured and white thread, buckram, tanned leather, shoes, and hats; and here is also a sugar-house. The houses are built of stone, generally three or four stories high; and the principal streets, with a number of lesser ones, are all paved in the best manner. Trading vessels of the largest burden can get into the harbour, which is safe, commodious, and of easy access, with broad, extensive piers, well adapted for the purposes of loading and discharging vessels; and there is good room on the quay for ship-building, which is carried on here to a large extent. In the year 1792, there were 116 vessels belonging to the port, navigated by 698 men: of these, 34 were employed in the foreign, and 78 in the coasting trade, with 4 in the whale fishery. The inhabitants are computed at 20,000. Dundee is situated on the N. side of the Frith of Tay, 14 miles NW. of St. Andrews, and 30 N. of Edinburgh.

DUNMANUS, a large, deep bay, on the SW. coast of Ireland, separated from that of Bantry by a narrow point of land. It is very easy to enter, and very safe when entered, yet there are no inhabitants near it to give it importance. Its mouth, or entrance, lies in lat. 51. 20. N. lon. 9. 42. W.

Dunmore, in Galway, Connaught. Dunmore Head, in Kerry, Munster, the most western point of Europe. Dunmore Cave, in Kilkenny, Leinster, contains a number of figures of a crystalline substance scarcely scarcely less curious than those of Antiparos.

DUNMOW, GREAT, a town of Essex, with a manufacture of baize. In the reign of Henry III. the Lord Fitzwalter instituted a custom here, which is still the tenure of the manor, that whatever married man did not repent of his marriage, or quarrel with his wife, in a year and a day afterwards, should go to the priory, and receive from the lord a gammon, or sitch of bacon, provided he swore to the truth of it. Some old records here, mention several that have claimed and received this reward: and it has been received so lately as since the 1750, by a weaver and his wife, of Coggeshall. It has been demanded more recently, but the demand is now evaded, from the ceremony being attended with considerable expence to the lord of the manor. It is situated on the Chelmer, 13 miles N. of Chelmsford, and 40 NE. of London. Market on Saturday.

Dunmow, Little, E. of Great Dunmow.

Dunnemanagh, in Tyrone, Ulster.

EDDYSTONE ROCKS, in the English Channel, so called from the great variety of contrary sets of the tide or current which prevail near them. They are situated nearly SSW. from the middle of Plymouth Sound, distant from the port about 14 miles, and from Ram Head 12 and a half. As they lie nearly in the direction of vessels coasting up and down the Channel, they were very dangerous, and ships were sometimes wrecked on them, before the light-house was established here. They are so exposed to the swells of the ocean, from all the south-western points of the compass, that the heavy seas break on them with inconceivable fury. Sometimes, after a storm, when the sea is to all appearance perfectly smooth, the under current meeting the slope of the rocks, the sea beats upon them in a terrific and magnificent manner, and even rises above the light-house, overtopping it, for the instant, with a canopy of frothy wave. The present light-house is nearly 80 feet high, and has withstood the most violent storms, without sustaining the smallest injury. It was begun by the late Mr. John Smeaton, August 2, 1757, and finished August 24, 1759.

EDINBURGH, a city, the capital of Scotland, situated, in the county to which it gives name, on three hills. It may properly be divided into the Old and New Towns. The situation of the Old Town is singular and striking: it stands on the middle ridge, or hill, which is narrow and steep, and terminated abruptly on the W. by the castle, a very ancient building, accessible only by a draw-bridge, and erected on a lofty, precipitous rock. The High Street, a mile in length, and generally 90 feet broad, extends from the castle to Holyrood House. On each side of this steep hill the houses form narrow lanes, which are called closes, and extend N. and S. Many of them are lofty, but so piled, as it were, upon each other, that they are neither commodious nor elegant. The New Town is situated on the N. side of the Old, on an elevated plain, from which the ground descends to the S. and N. with a gentle declivity. It forms an assemblage of uniform streets and squares, including several public buildings, the whole built entirely of stone, with considerable taste and elegance. The buildings on the S. side of the Old Town, though inferior to those on the N. are extensive and stately. The most striking object here, is the New College, building by public subscription, on the site of the old one, on a large and magnificent plan. The number of students in the university, is estimated at 1000, of whom 400 study medicine. The city is governed by a lord provost, a guild council, and 25 common council. Here are 14 incorporated trades, each having its deacon or warden. The principal public buildings are the palace of Holyrood House, the Royal Exchange, built in 1753, the Register Office, the Physicians' Hall, Heriot's Hospital, founded in 1628, for the education of 140 poor boys, Watson's Hospital, for the sons of decayed merchants, an hospital for orphans, and a Royal Infirmary, incorporated by charter in 1736. Edinburgh, with its dependencies, is supposed to contain 100,000 inhabitants, and is supplied with water, conveyed in cast-iron pipes from Commifton, 4 miles to the W. It is 2 miles S. of Leith, which is its port, 54 WNW. of Berwick upon Tweed, and 389 N. by W. of London. Lat. 55. 58. N. lon. 3. 7. W.

EDINBURGHSHIRE, or MID Lothian, a populous, well-cultivated, fertile, and pleasant county of Scotland, 27 miles in length, and 16 in breadth, but in some places not above 6. EGYPT, a country of Africa, about 500 miles in length, and 160 in breadth. It is bounded on the S. by Nubia; on the W. by the Deserts of Barca, Fezzan, &c. on the N. by the Mediterranean; and on the E. by the Red Sea and the Isthmus of Suez. This country, so famous in history, seems not to have an extent proportionable to the pompous description which the ancients cients have given of its having contained 20,000 towns, or cities, and several millions of inhabitants, and of its ancient kings keeping armies of 300,000 men, and executing those prodigious works, the pyramids, the labyrinth, the immense groves of Thebais; the obelisks, temples, and pompous palaces; the Lake Moeris, and the vast canals, &c. but when we consider the amazing fertility of the soil, enriched, as it has always been, by the overflowing of the Nile, and its high state of cultivation, these accounts seem more probable. Egypt has been ever noted for its plenty of corn; and when the dearth was in all lands in the days of Jacob, in the land of Egypt there was bread; and all countries sent thither to buy corn. Except in our winter months, the heat is oppressive to all who are not accustomed to it, and they are generally visited by the plague about once in seven years. The winds are sometimes of such extreme heat and aridity, that their influence proves mortal. During the time they last, the streets are deserted, and the inhabitants are almost blinded by drifts of sand, which are so subtle, that they insinuate themselves into the closets and cabinets. No country in the world is better furnished with corn, rice, flesh, fish, sugar, fruits, and vegetables than Egypt. It is divided into the Upper, Middle, and Lower, which last comprehends the Delta, which produces oranges, lemons, figs, dates, almonds, cassia, and plantains, in great plenty. The animals found in Egypt are tigers, hyenas, antelopes, apes with the head like a dog's: camels, black cattle, fine horses, and large asses, crocodiles, the hippopotamus, or river horse, the camelion, the ichneumon; ostriches, eagles, hawks, pelicans, water-fowl of various kinds, with the ibis, which resembles a duck, and was deified by the ancient Egyptians, on account of its destroying serpents and noxious insects. They have a serpent here, called the cerastes, or horned viper, the bite of which is mortal to those who have not the secret of guarding against it. The practice of charming, alluded to in Psal. lviii. 4, 5, Ecclesi. x. 11, and Jerem. viii. 7, appears to prevail here till this day; for some of the natives can play with the cerastes, which to them is perfectly harmless, but when applied to a hen, or any other animal, it bites and instantly kills it. Since Egypt has been under the dominion of the Turks, it has been governed by a bashaw, who resides at Cairo. Under him are inferior governors in the several parts of the country. Those in Upper Egypt are generally Arabs, who pay tribute to the Grand Signior, and make presents to the bashaw, governing despotically, and making war with each other: besides these there are sheiks, who preside over particular places, and are masters of a few villages. The present population of Egypt is computed at 2,300,000. The inhabitants are composed of four different races of people; the Turks; the Arabs; the Cophts, who are descended from the first Egyptians, which became Christians; and the Mamlouks, who were originally Circassian and Mingrelian slaves, and being the only military force, are the real masters of the country. The governors of the country are Mahometans, but the Cophts, and Greeks, and Latins, are Christians of different sects; and in the great towns there are numbers of Jews. A considerable trade was carried on here in E. India commodities, till the Portuguese found the way to Asia round the Cape of Good Hope. However, the merchants of Europe visit the harbours in the Mediterranean, and import and export several sorts of merchandise; and, from other parts, the natives get elephants' teeth, gold-dust, musk, civet, ambergris, and coffee. The gold-dust is brought from Negroland to Fez and Morocco, and thence to Cairo in caravans, over immense deserts. The commodities which the merchants purchase here, are coffee, senna, cassia, rhubarb, sal ammoniac, myrrh, saffron, salt-petre, aloes, opium, indigo, sugar, sandalwood, dates, cotton, cloth, &c. The largest of the pyramids takes up ten acres of ground, and is, as well as the others, built upon a rock. The external part is chiefly of large square stones, of unequal sizes, and the height of it about 700 feet: within these, and in their vicinity, are catacombs, wherein are mummies, or embalmed dead bodies, which are three or four thousand years old. The complexion of the Egyptians is tawny, and the farther S. the darker, insomuch that those on the confines of Nubia are almost black. They are mostly an indolent people, especially the richer sort, who spend much of the day in drinking coffee, smoking tobacco, and sleeping; and these are said to be ignorant, proud, and ridiculously vain. The principal city is Cairo.

ELEPHAWTA, or GALIPOURI, a small island on the W. coast of Hindoostan, about 5 miles from Bombay, and inhabited by about 100 poor Indian families. It contains one of the most stupendous antiquities tiquities in the world. The figure of an elephant, of the natural size, cut coarsely in black stone, appears in an open plain, near the landing place, from which an easy slope leads to a stupendous subterranean temple, hewn out of the solid rock, 80 or 90 feet long, and 40 broad. The roof, which is cut flat, is supported by regular rows of pillars, about 10 feet high, with capitals resembling round cushions, and at the farther end of it are three gigantic figures, mutilated by the absurd zeal of the Portuguese, when this island was in their possession. Mr. Grose judges this immense excavation to be a bolder work than that of the pyramids of Egypt; and Major Rennel thinks this, and a subterranean temple in the adjacent isle of Salsette, to be monuments of a superstition anterior to that of the Hindoos. This island has been ceded to the English by the Mahrattas.

ELY*, an ancient city of Cambridgeshire, neither populous (the inhabitants being about 2500) nor beautiful, and chiefly noted for it's minster, or cathedral, which has a stately lanthorn, seen at a vast distance, but which seems to totter with every blast of wind. It has but one good street, well paved, the rest being unpaved, and miserably dirty. The bishops have all the rights of Counts Palatine, which also they had through the whole Isle of Ely, till the reign of Henry VIII. Ely is completely subordinate to the bishop in it's civil government, and is the only city in England unrepresented in parliament. It is seated on a rising ground, near the river Ouse, and other streams, the former of which is navigable to Lynn, and by which it carries on a pretty good trade, in a soil particularly famous for producing large quantities of strawberries, greens, and other garden stuff; 17 miles N. of Cambridge, and 68 N. of London. ENGLAND, the southern, and most considerable part of the Island of Great Britain is bounded on the N. by Scotland; on the E. and NE. by the German Ocean; on the S. by the English Channel; and on the W. by the principality of Wales, and the Irish Channel. It lies between 2 degrees E. and 6 W. longitude, and between 49 and 56 N. latitude. It is of a triangular form. From the Land's End in Cornwall, to Berwick upon Tweed, it is about 425 miles; from Berwick to the S. Foreland in Kent, it's length is about 345 miles, and thence to the Land's End, it's greatest breadth is 340. The country exhibits a variety of prospects, varying from the extensive plain, and gently-rising uplands, with the intervening vales, and gently-flowing rivers, to the lofty mountains, craggy hills, deep dells, and tumbling torrents. Though in some parts there are large barren moors, and wide, uncultivated heaths; on the whole, few countries have a larger proportion of land capable of culture, and there is none where agriculture is better attended to, or, indeed, where it is more necessary for the subsistence of the inhabitants. All the valuable productions, both animal and vegetable, of this country, have been imported at different periods, from the continent, and have been kept up and improved by constant attention. Overrun with woods, like the wilds of America, nuts, acorns, crabs, and a few wild berries, form the only vegetable food, which this country formerly afforded. The bear, the wolf, and the wild boar, now totally extirpated, roamed at large in the forests, large herds of stags ranged through the woods, roebucks bounded over the hills, and wild bulls ranged in the marshy pastures. By degrees, the woods were destroyed, in order to make way for cultivation, the marshes were drained, and the wild animals, invaded in their retreats, gradually disappeared, and their places were supplied by the domestic kinds. England now possesses no other wild quadrupeds than some of the smaller kinds, such as the fox, the wild cat, the badger, the martin, and others of the weasel kind, the otter, the hedge hog, the hare and rabbit; the squirrel, dormouse, mole, and several species of the rat and mouse. On the

the other hand, the various kinds of domestic animals imported from abroad; have been reared to the greatest perfection; and the improvements in the vegetable products of this island have been no less considerable. The rigours of winter, as well as the parching heats of summer, are felt here in a much less degree than in parallel climates on the continent, as the breezes from the sea temper the severities of the opposite seasons; but the changes of weather are generally more frequent and sudden, while few countries are clothed with so beautiful and lasting a verdure. It's situation, however, so far north, is less favourable to the ripening than to the growth of vegetable productions. The harvests, especially in the northern parts, often suffer from the rains, and the fruits fall short of perfect maturity. The richest parts of the land are, in general, the middle and southern: extensive tracts in the northern parts are rather sterile, and on the eastern coasts, in many parts, the ground is sandy or marshy. In the north the country is mountainous, and Cornwall and the adjacent counties contain many rough, hilly tracts; but, in these parts, a variety of rich and valuable minerals and metals are found. Considered as a corn country, the E. coast, from it's superior dryness, is favourable to the growth of grain; and the W. coast, from the wetness of the climate, is better calculated for pasturage. The most considerable rivers are the Thames, Severn, Medway, Trent, Ouse, Tyne, Tees, Wear, Mersey, Dee, Avon, Eden, Derwent, &c. The lakes are chiefly in the NW. counties; and those of Westmorland and Cumberland, in particular, exhibit varieties of romantic, picturesque, and grand scenery. The river-fish, from the populousness of the country, and the number of fishers, are, in many parts, much diminished; but the sea is an inexhaustible source of wealth, and the coasts are enlivened by numerous inhabitants, who gain their chief subsistence from the deep. The manufactures and commerce of this country are prodigious, and absorb almost the whole attention of many classes of people. The government is a mixture of monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy; the legislative power residing in the king, the house of lords, and the house of commons, but the executive power is vested solely in the king, who appoints the great officers of state, the judges, and many of even the inferior gradations of magistracy. The national church, establishment is episcopal; the 39 articles are interpreted by the clergy, in general, according to the liberal principles of Arminius, although the 17th article strongly favours of the Calvinistic creed. The dissenters are numerous, and of different descriptions, but most of the rigorous penal laws, which were long in force against them; have been repealed.

ENGLAND, NEW, a country of North America, bounded on the W. by New York; on the N. by Canada; on the E. by Nova Scotia and the Atlantic Ocean; and on the S. by the same ocean and Long Island Sound. It is in many parts hilly; but the country is, notwithstanding fertile, well cultivated, and populous. It was first settled by the Puritans, who were driven from England, at different times, by persecution. The principal productions are wheat, Indian corn, rye, oats, flax, hemp, and garden vegetables. The exports are fish, timber, horses, mules, potash, pearl ash, salted beef, &c. The colleges here are in a flourishing state. It contains five states, namely, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and Vermont. The Connecticut, Merrimack, Penobscot, and Piscataway, are the principal rivers.

EPHESUS, anciently a celebrated city of Ionia, in Asia Minor, and the capital of the Roman dominions in Asia. Here was the famous temple of Diana, which the ancient Christians afterwards converted into a place of public worship; but it is now so entirely ruined, that it is difficult to find the ground plot; however, there are some ruins of the walls, and five or six marble columns, all of a piece, 40 feet in length, and 7 in diameter. It is now called Ajafalouc, and has still some magnificent and curious remains of it's former splendour. The fortress seems to be the work of the Greek emperors. The only inhabitants are a few Greek families, who have reared huts among the ruins, to shelter themselves from the weather, and who are so illiterate, as to be unable to read, in it's original language, the Epistle of Paul to their ancestors, the Ephesians. It is seated at the mouth of the Castrus, and has still a good harbour, 40 miles nearly S. of Smyrna. Lat. 37. 52. N. lon. 27. 42. E.

It's territory comprehends 2 towns and 73 villages, the inhabitants of which are at so small a distance from each other, that they can go, it is said, to each and return the same day. It is 110 miles W. of Dresden, and 160 E. of Cologne. Lat. 50. 54. N. lon. 11. 23. E.

ERIBOL, LOCH, an arm of the sea, on the N. coast of Sutherlandshire, affording a safe retreat to the largest vessels.

ERICHT, LOCH, a large lake in the NW. of the district of Athol, in Perth-shire, extending into Invernessshire. Near this place wandered the unfortunate Prince Charles Stewart, after his discomfiture at Culloden, in 1746, lurking in caves and among rocks, exposed to the rigours of the climate, sometimes alone, at others with a few faithful adherents, till he, at length, escaped the sanguinary parties that were in search of him, lured by the offered reward. The waters of this lake descend into another, called Loch Rannoch.

Eridge, Suffex, 8^m miles from Grinstead. Eridge, Suffex, N. of Rotherbridge.

ERIE, a lake of N. America, situated between 40. 50. to 43 deg. N. lat. and between 78. 50. to 84. W. lon. It is about 260 miles long from E. to W. and 40 to 60 broad. It communicates at it's NE. end with Lake Ontario by the Strait of Niagara. The islands and banks towards it's W. end are much infested with rattle snakes; and, on the leaves of the large water lily, which grows here, covering the surface of the water, to an extent of many acres, and other aquatic plants, myriads of water snakes lie basking in the sun in summer. Of the venomous serpents which infest the lake, the hissing snake, about 18 inches long, small and speckled, is accounted the most deadly. The wind, which it blows from it's mouth, if inhaled by the unwary traveller, brings on a decline, which proves mortal in a few months, no remedy being yet found to counteract it's baneful influence.

Erighill Church, in Monaghan, Ulster, 66 miles from Dublin.

ESSEX, a county of England, bounded on the W. by Middlesex and Herts; on the N. by part of Cambridgeshire and the river Stour, which separates it from Suffolk; on the E. by the German Ocean; and on the S. by the Thames, which divides it from Kent. It is about 54 miles long from E. to W. and 48 broad from N. to S. and is divided into 18 hundreds, which contain 26 market towns, 403 parishes, about 63,000 houses, and 325,000 inhabitants. It does not contain any considerable hills; but exhibits a variety of soil and face of country, generally fertile. It's SW. part is occupied principally by the forests of Epping and Hainault; and is noted for it's butter. The NW. part from Saffron Walden to Cambridge, is famous for the growth of Saffron. The middle part is a fine corn country, varied with gentle inequalities of surface, and sprinkled with woods. What are called the Hundreds of Essex, (though induced in the hundreds of Barnstable, Rochford, and Dengy) bordering on the Thames and the sea, consist chiefly of marshy grounds, which afford excellent pasturage, yet are deemed unwholesome; but more inland, they are dry, elevated, and healthy; and even the worst parts of them are rendered much healthier than formerly, by clearing the woods and draining the stagnant waters. Great numbers of calves are sent from hence to the London market, with other cattle; also fowls, wild and tame, and the oysters, known by the name of Colchester oysters. The principal rivers, besides the Thames, are the Stour, which falls into the German Ocean at Harwich; the Lea, Chelmer, Blackwater, Coln, Crouch, and Roding. Chelmsford is the capital.

ETNA, MOUNT, or GIBELLO, a celebrated volcano in Sicily, on a mountain, which is about 63 miles in circumference at the foot, and 10,954 feet in height. Not only the mountain, but all the neighbouring regions, appear to have been formed of the accumulating matter that has been ejected, from age to age, from this never-never-ceasing furnace. The first eruption, of Etna, recorded in history, is that mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, but without fixing the period when it happened: the second, however, recorded by Thucydides, happened in the year 734 before the Christian æra. From this period, to the year 1447, there were 18 more eruptions. After this it ceased to emit fire near 90 years. The next eruption was in 1536; others followed in 1537, 1567, 1603, (which continued till 1636) 1664 (which continued 14 years) 1682, 1686, 1693, 1755, 1763, 1764, 1766, 1780, and 1787. Of all these eruptions, that of 1693 was, by far, the most destructive. It was attended with an earthquake that, in an instant, overturned the town of Catania, though 10 miles distant from the mountain), and buried no less than 18,000 persons in it's ruins. Mount Etna is well cultivated all round the foot, and covered with vines on the S. side; but on the N. there is nothing but large forests. The top is always covered with snow, though it never ceases to smoke, and often emits flames. The cinders, which are thrown out in small quantities, serve for manure to the adjacent lands, but a large torrent does mischief; and the new apertures which are suddenly made, from time to time, are alarming and dangerous to the inhabitants.

EUROPE, the least of the four general parts, or quarters of the world, is bounded on the W. by the Atlantic, on the N. by the Frozen Ocean, on the E. by Asia, and on the S. by the Black Sea and the Mediterranean. It is about 3300 miles in length, and about 2700 in breadth, and is situated between 10 deg. W. and 60 E. lon. and between 36 and 72 deg. N. lat. As it nearly all lies within the temperate zone, here is neither the excessive heat, nor the insupportable cold of the other parts of the continent. Though it does not afford the richest productions of the earth, nor abound in costly mines, it is generally much more populous and better cultivated, in proportion to its extent, than the other quarters of the globe. The wild animals are but few, except in the woods, rocks, and mountains of the north, and of the Alps, but the domesticated are very numerous. The chief mountains are the Alps, Apennines, and Pyrenees. The principal rivers are the Danube, Dniester, Dnieper, Vistula, Volga, Dwina, Bog, Oby, Don, Scheldt, Rhine, Rhone, Seine, Loire, Garonne, Groyne, Tajo, Thames, and Severn. The principal lakes are those of Constance, Geneva, Lausanne, Wenner, Ladoga, and Onega. Europe contains the countries of Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Great Britain, Ireland, Russia, France, Germany, Poland, Spain, Italy, Portugal, Hungary, Swisserland, and part of Turkey, beside some islands in the Mediterranean and elsewhere. There are three empires, namely, those of Russia, Turkey, and Germany. The kings are those of Great Britain and Ireland, Spain, Portugal, Prussia, Denmark, Sweden, Sardinia, Bohemia, Hungary, and Naples, or the Two Sicilies. There is also an archduke of Austria, and a great duke of Tuscany. The republics are those of France, Holland, Swisserland, Genoa, Geneva, Lucca, San Marino, and Ragusa. The languages are, the Italian, French, Spanish, and Portuguese, which are partly a corruption of the Latin; the German, Flemish, Dutch, Swedish, Danish, and English, which proceed from the Teutonic; the Slavonian, which predominates in the language of Poland, Russia, Bohemia, and a great part of Turkey in Europe; the Celtic, of which there are dialects in Wales, Scotland, Ireland, the NW. of France, and Lapland; the modern Greek, and several others.

others. The prevailing religious profession is the Christian, divided into the Greek, Romish, and Protestant churches. Mahometanism is the established faith of the Turks, and there are numberless Jews dispersed in the different countries.

EUSKIRCHEN, a town of Juliers.

EUSTATIA, ST. one of the least of the Leeward Islands, in the W. Indies, about 3 leagues NW. of St. Christophers. It is properly a mountain in the form of a sugar-loaf: or, it may be termed, a huge pyramidal rock, whose top is hollow, or concave, and serves as a large den for wild animals. It is strong by situation, having but one landing-place, which is difficult of access, and fortified with all the art imaginable, by it's masters, the Dutch. Tobacco is it's chief production. Not less than 5,000 white inhabitants, and about 15,000 negroes subsist upon this island, and rear hogs, kids, rabbits, and poultry in such abundance, that they can afford to supply their neighbours, after having served themselves. In general, it serves as a storehouse for all kinds of European commodities. In 1781 it was surprised by Admiral Rodney, but was soon after taken by the French, and restored to the Dutch by the peace of 1783. Lat. 17. 29. N. lon. 63. 5. W.

FERMANAGH, a county of Ulster, in Ireland, 35 miles in length, and about 25 in breadth, containing 19 parishes. It is bounded on the W. by Leitrim and Donegal; on the N. by Donegal and Tyrone; on the E. by Tyrone and Monaghan; and on the S. by Cavan and Leitrim. It is navigable throughout its whole length, by means of the Lakes of Lough Erne; but travelling in it is difficult, in many places, by reason of the hilly, rugged, and uneven surface of the country, and the boggy grounds. The number of houses is calculated at nearly 12,000, and of the inhabitants at 72,000. The linen manufacture, and raising cattle, form the chief trade of this county. There is only one linen-market in it, but the country abounds with spinners and good flax. The sales are averaged at 4100l. annually. Enniskillen is the capital.

FERMO, a town of Ancona, situated near the Adriatic.

FERMOY, a town in Cork, Munster, seated on the Blackwater, over which there is a large stone bridge of 13 arches.

Ferncy Lee, Derby. in the High Peak. Ferncy Hall, Shrop. NW. of Ludlow.

FERRARA, a city and district of Italy, in the Pope's territories. The Ferrarese is now almost uncultivated, though formerly one of the finest countries in Italy. The air is unwholesome, on account of the marshes, and the inhabitants are too few to drain them. The town of Ferrara has a number of fine buildings, which evince its former opulence; but the inhabitants, who are very few, in proportion to the extent of the place, bear every mark of poverty. Ariosto lies buried here in a Benedictine convent, and Tasso was confined as an idiot in the hospital of St. Anne. It is seated on a branch of the Po, 25 miles NE. of Bologna.

Ferriby, Yorks. near Hull. Ferring, Sussex, on the coast, SE. of Augmering. Ferring Ferry, Kent, opposite to the Isle of Sheppey.

FERRITER'S ISLANDS. See BLASQUES.

FERRO, or HIERO, the most westerly of the Canary Islands, remarkable for affording little water, except what is supplied by the fountain tree, which grows here (its top being always covered with a thick cloud) and which distils water from its leaves, in such plenty as to satisfy the wants of the inhabitants. Many voyagers, at least speak so; but the French geographers totally deny its existence; and, indeed, this tree has been but too long the subject of a popular error. It is more probable, that the inhabitants make use of what water they can collect in cisterns and reservoirs during the rainy season. Though not very fertile, the inhabitants raise corn, sugar, fruits, and legumes, and feed a great number of cattle. The western extremity of Ferro was, heretofore, by common consent, accounted the place of the first meridian; but the national partialities, having induced the moderns to adopt the capital of their own particular countries, as the place from which to reckon the longitude; the following is its situation according to the English. Lat. 27. 47. N. lon. 17. 46. W.

FERRO, FARO, FAROL, or FAROER ISLANDS, 25 small islands in the Northern Ocean, subject to Denmark, of which 17 only are habitable. Each of these is a lofty mountain, rising out of the waves, divided from the others by deep and rapid currents. Some are deeply indented with secure harbours; all are steep, and most of them exhibit tremendous precipices. The soil is shallow, but remarkably fertile; barley, the only corn grown here, yields above 20 for 1; and the grass affords abundant pasturage for sheep: but no trees, above the size of a juniper or stunted willow are to be seen here. Vast quantities of sea-fowl frequent the rocks, the taking of which furnishes a perilous employ for the inhabitants. Their exports are salted mutton, tallow, goose-quills, feathers, eider-down, knit woollen waist-coats, coats, caps, and stockings. Lat. between 61. 15. and 62. 10. N. lon. between 5. and 7. 26. W.

FERROL, a strongly fortified town of Galicia, with one of the best harbours in Spain, and even in all Europe; vessels lying secure here from all winds. It is now a marine arsenal, and the principal station for the Spanish navy, although, in 1751, it was only a small and dirty fishing-town. It is seated on a bay of the Atlantic Ocean, 20 miles NE. of Corunna. Lat. 43. 30. N. lon. 8. 4. W.

Fetberston, Yorkshire, W. Riding, W. of Pontefract. Fetberston Haugh, Northumb. SW. of Beltingham and Haltwessel, by S. Tyne.

FETU, or AFFETU, a country on the Gold Coast of Guinea, E. of Commenda. It was formerly about 160 miles in length, but is now said to be reduced to 10 miles in length and the same in breadth, being almost ruined by wars. It is a pleasant and fertile country, abounding in corn, cattle, palm wine, and oil, and is full of narrow paths, bordered with shady trees. The Dutch have a fort here.

FEVERSHAM, a very ancient town of Kent, containing about 600 houses and 5000 inhabitants. It has a large manufacture of gunpowder, and a considerable oyster fishery, employs a number of vessels in the coasting trade, and even sends some to Prussia, Norway, and Sweden, for fir timber and iron. Four boys trade alternately from this place to London, every week, with corn, hops, &c. It is seated on a creek, which is navigable for vessels of 130 tons, and which communicates with the E. Swale, 9 miles NW. of Canterbury, and 48 E. by S. of London. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

FEURS, a town in the dept. of Rhone and Loire, seated on the river Loire, 23 miles SW. of Lyons.

Fews, a parish of Waterford, in Munster. Fews, a ridge of mountains, which runs across Armagh, in Ulster.

Fewston, York. W. of Knaresborough.

FEZ, a large country of Barbary, in Africa, bounded on the W. by the Atlantic Ocean; on the N. by the Mediterranean Sea; on the E. by Algiers, and a part of Biledulgerid; and on the S. by Biledulgerid, Tafilet, and Morocco. It is near 400 miles in length, and from 70 to 280 in breadth. The air is temperate and wholesome, and the country is mountainous, particularly to the W. and S. near Mount Atlas. The forests abound with wild beasts, and the lions are the most daring and savage in Africa. The soil is fertile and populous, producing citrons, oranges, dates, almonds, olives, figs, raisins, sugar, honey, and corn in abundance. Here are fine breeds of camels, beeves, sheep, and other cattle; and the horses are the finest in Barbary. It is watered by several rivers and streams, and the chief town is Fez; but Sallee is the principal port for their cruisers, or rovers, which are small, but full of men.

FEZ, the capital of Fez, is one of the largest cities in Africa. It is composed of three towns, Beleyde, Old Fez, and New Fez. Old Fez is the most considerable, and contains about 80,000 inhabitants. The palaces are magnificent, and there are a great number of mosques, adorned with marble pillars and other ornaments. Here are two colleges for students, built of marble and adorned with paintings; one of these has 100 rooms. Here are also above 100 public baths. The houses are mostly built of brick or stone, and adorned with mosaic work; those of brick are ornamented with glazing and colours, like Dutch tiles; and the wood work and ceilings are carved, painted, and gilt. There is a court to every house, in which are square marble basins. The roofs are flat, and the inhabitants sleep on them in the summer. The gardens are numerous, and full of fragrant flowers and shrubs. The inhabitants are clothed like the Turks. All the traders live in a separate part of the city; and the exchange is as large as a small town. From hence the caravans go to Mecca, carrying with them ready-made garments, Morocco leather, indigo, cochineal, and ostrich feathers, for which they receive in return silks, muslins, and drugs. Other caravans go to Tombuctou, and the river Niger; one of which generally consists of about 20,000 persons. They travel over such dry, barren deserts, that every other camel carries water. Their commodities are felt, cowries, wrought silk, British cloth, and the woollen manufactures of Barbary. Here are great numbers of Jews, but the bulk of the inhabitants are Moors, of a tawney complexion; there are also great numbers of negroes and their descendants. Fez is 160 miles nearly S. of Gibraltar, and 210 NNE. of Morocco. Lat 34. 4. N. lon. 5. 35. W.

FEZZAN, a country of Africa, forming, according to the report of Mr. Lucas, (a missionary employed by the Association, for exploring the interior of that continent) a circular domain in a vast wilderness, like an island in the ocean, is bounded on the N. by Tripoli; on the E. by the deserts, which divide it from Egypt; on the S. by Bornou, or Bernoa, and Cashna; and on the W. by the Deserts of Zaara, lying between 25 and 30 degrees N. latitude. It is an extensive plain, encompassed by mountains, except to the W. Among their tame animals are the sheep, cow, goat, camel, and a species of the domestic fowl of Europe. The wild animals are the ostrich, and antelopes of various kinds. Adders, snakes, scorpions, and toads are numerous, and sometimes crawl into their houses. The heats of summer are intense, when the wind is generally from the E. and S.; but if it change, as it sometimes does, for a few days, to the W. or N., an agreeable and reviving freshness takes place. The diseases to which the inhabitants are most subject, are those of the inflammatory and putrid kind. The small pox is common; violent head-aches attack them in the summer, and they are troubled with rheumatic pains. The natives are of a deep swarthy complexion; inclining in their persons more to the negro than the Arab cast. They are tall, but indolent and inactive. Their dress is similar to that of the Moors in Barbary. Agriculture and pasturage are the chief occupations. The houses are built of clay, with a flat roof, composed of boughs of trees, on which a quantity of earth is laid. There are some venerable remains of ancient magnificence, and numerous smoking lakes, producing a species of fossil alkali, called trona. In their common intercourse, the shereef (or governor) and the poorest of the people converse familiarly, and eat and drink together. In religion they are strict, but not intolerant Mahometans, and seem tolerably comfortable under their government, which is monarchical. Gold dust constitutes their chief medium of payment; and value in that medium is always expressed by weight. The sovereign, who is believed to be descended from their prophet, is tributary to the bashaw of Tripoli. Mourzouk is the capital of this country, which is said to contain 28 towns and 100 villages.

FIFESHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the N. by the river Tay, part of Perthshire, and the county of Kinross; on the E. by the German Ocean and the Frith of Forth; on the S. by the Frith of Forth; and on the W. by the counties of Perth, Kinross, and Clackmannan. It is about 38 miles in length, and from 7 to 16 in breadth. This country is fertile in point of soil, abundant in cattle, supplies coals, iron, lime, and freestone; is uncommonly populous, and has a number of flourishing manufactures. The whole shore, indeed, from Crail to Calross, is one continued chain of towns and villages, and property is remarkably well divided here.

FLORENCE, a celebrated and beautiful city of Italy, the capital of Tuscany, situated in the middle of the Vale of Arno. The prospect here is bounded on every side by an amphitheatre of fertile hills, adorned with villages, country-houses, and gardens. It was founded by the soldiers of Sylla, destroyed by Totila, and rebuilt by Charlemagne. For curiosities, this city is the principal in Italy, after Rome. The architecture of the houses, in general, is executed in a good taste, the streets are clean, and paved with large broad stones, chiseled so as to prevent the horses from sliding. The squares are spacious, and the palaces, churches, and other public structures, are in a splendid style of architecture, with pillars, statues, pyramids, and fountains, in almost every street. The city is divided into two unequal parts by the river Arno, over which there are 4 bridges, within sight of each other. That called Ponte de la Trinita is built of white marble, and adorned with 4 statues, representing the seasons, and other ornaments. The Florentine merchants were formerly men of vast wealth, and one of them, about the middle of the 15th century, built that grand fabric, which, from the name of it's founder, is still called the Palazzo Pitti. He failed under the prodigious expence of this building, which was immediately purchased by the Medici family, and has continued ever since to be the residence of the grand dukes. Besides the gardens, furniture, antique statues, paintings, &c. which are justly and universally admired; here are various other curiosities, as the cabinets of arts, of astronomy, of natural history, of medals, of porcelain, of antiquities, &c. In the year 1530, Alexander de Medicis was created Grand Duke of Tuscany, by the Emperor Charles V. and in 1737, the family of Medicis became extinct, when Florence and the duchy of Tuscany fell to the duke of Lorraine, afterwards emperor. Florence contains a university, and is 125 miles NNW. of Rome. Lat. 43. 46. N. lon. 11. 20. E.

The number of inhabitants is about 1300 or 1400. It is fertile, and takes it's name from the numberless flowers which grow wild in every part of the island.

FLORIDA, a country of N. America, bounded on the W. by Louisiana, on the N. by Louisiana and Georgia, on the E. by the Atlantic, and on the S. by the Gulf of Mexico. It is divided into E. and W. East Florida extends about 350 miles from N. to S. and 160 from E. to W. West Florida is about 200 miles from E. to W. and 50 from N. to S. St. Augustine is the capital of the former, and Pensacola of the latter. The country about St. Augustine is the least fertile; yet even here two crops of Indian corn are annually produced. The banks of the rivers are of a superior quality, and well adapted to the culture of rice and corn. The interior country, which is high and pleasant, abounds with wood of almost every kind; particularly white and red oak, pine, hickory, cypress, red and white cedar. The intervals between the hilly parts are extremely rich, and produce spontaneously all the fruits common to Georgia and the Carolinas. In many places, vines are successfully cultivated, and the ranges of cattle are immense. The king of Spain holds possession of Florida; but the Indians, or native Americans, are pretty numerous.

FOX ISLANDS, a group of islands in the Northern Archipelago, 16 in number. They are seated between the E. coast of Kamtschatka, and the W. coast of N. America, between 52 and 55 deg. of N. latitude, and are so named, on account of the great number of black, grey, and red foxes, with which they abound. The inhabitants dress in furs, and ornament their heads with showy caps. They live together in societies of families united, which form what they call a race, who mutually aid each other. The inhabitants of the same island account themselves of the same race; and each looks upon the island as a possession which is common to all individuals of the same society. They have neither chiefs nor superiors, neither laws nor punishments. They feed upon the flesh of all sorts of sea animals, and generally eat it raw. When they dress their food, they make use of a hollow stone, in which they place the fish or flesh; they then cover it with another, and close the interstices with lime or clay; they then lay it horizontally on two stones, and light a fire under it; and by this mode of cookery the meat retains more of it's succulency. The meat intended for keeping, is dried without salt, in the open air. They feed their children, when very young, with the coarsest flesh, and for the most part raw. The Russians trade with them, and call their islands the Lyffie Ostrova.

Foxley, Norf. SW. of Repeham. Foxley, Wilts, near Malmesbury. Foxton, Camb. near Harlston. Foxton, Durham, W. of Foulthorp. Foxton, Leic. 2 miles from Market Harborough. Foye, Heref. N. of Ross. Foye Will, Cornw. SE. of Camelford.

FRANCE, including Belgium, or the cidevant Austrian Netherlands, is a country of Europe, bounded on the W. by the Atlantic Ocean; on the N. by the English Channel, the German Ocean, and Holland; on the E. by Germany, Switzerland, and Piedmont; and on the S. by the Mediterranean Sea and the Pyrenean Mountains; extending from 4. 48. W. to 8. 22. E. lon. and from 42. 24. to 51. 24. N. lat. From Spain, on the S. to Holland, it's extent nearly is 700 miles; and about 650 from the most easterly part of the department of the Lower Rhine, to the westerly part of that of Finisterre. The air, particularly in the interior parts of the country, is, in general, mild and wholesome, and their weather more clear and settled than in England: in the northern provinces, however, the winters are intensely cold. The soil is agreeably diversified, and yields corn, wine and oil; figs, prunes, and various highly flavoured fruits; tobacco, hemp, flax, manna, saffron, and many drugs. Silk is also produced in great plenty. The forests are extensive, and the mineral productions various. It's situation is favourable to commerce, and the inhabitants have long availed themselves of many of their natural advantages. The principal rivals of France are the Loire, the Rhone, the Garonne, the Seine, the Scheldt, the Rhine, the Somme, the Var, the Adour, &c. the advantages of which, in commerce and conveniency, are considerably improved by the artificial rivers and canals which have been executed. The most considerable mountains, besides the Alps and Pyrenees, are Mount Jura, the Cevennes, and Mount Dor. Wolves excepted, France contains few animals, wild or tame, that are not to be found in England. The present government of France is a republic, established professedly on the principles of equality; and they have not any national establishment of religion. The French, in their manners appear more affable and easy than their neighbours on the east; less trifling and ceremonious than those on the south; and not so absorbed in the pursuit of gain as the English and Dutch. Their polite, elegant, and easy language, is more generally spoken, than any other in the world.

FRANCE, ISLE OF, a cidevant province of France, so called, because it was bounded by the rivers Seine, Marne, Oise, Aisne, and Ourque. Paris was the capital, and situated in the centre.

FRANCE, ISLE OF, or MAURITIUS, an island in the Indian Ocean, about 45 leagues in circumference: Indigo is the general object of cultivation, and attempts have been made to rear cochineal, as the island abounds with the plant on which the insects lie, but a small bird is sure to destroy them. It's ebony is the most solid, close, and shining of any in the world. Here are numerous groves of oranges and citrons, and the pine apple grows spontaneously in great perfection. Here is also abundance of black cattle, venison, and wild fowl, with potatoes, and other leguminous roots. There are two fine harbours, one on the E. side, and the other on the W. This island was first discovered by the Dutch, in 1598, who gave it the name of Mauritius, in honour of the Prince of Orange. About 40 years after, they began to form settlements here, but in the beginning of the present century the colony was withdrawn, and the island island was taken possession of by the French, in whose hands it has remained ever since. The inhabitants, black and white, amount to about 20,000. Lat. 20. 10. S. lon. 57. 29. E.

FRIENDLY ISLANDS, a cluster of islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, so named by Captain Cook, in 1773, on account of the friendship that seemed to subsist among the inhabitants, and their courteous behaviour to strangers. Tasman, the Dutch navigator, first touched here in 1643, and gave the names of New Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and Middleburg, to three of the principal islands. Cook explored the whole cluster, consisting of more than 60. New Amsterdam is the largest, extending 21 miles from E. to W. and 13 from N. to S. It is intersected by straight and pleasant roads, with fruit trees on each side, which provide shade from the scorching heat of the sun. Middleburg is called Eooa by the natives, who have given the names of Annamooka, Tongataboo, Hapae, and Leefooga, to the other principal islands. The general appearances of these islands conveys an idea of exuberant fertility; lity; the surface, at a distance, seems entirely clothed with trees of various sizes, some of which are uncommonly large, particularly the tall cocoa-palm, and a species of fig, with narrow-pointed leaves. It is almost wholly laid out in plantations, in which are some of the richest vegetable productions: such as bread-fruit, cocoanuts, plantains, yams, sugar-cane, and a fruit like a nectarine. Here are most of the articles which the Society Islands produce, and some which they have not. Their breed of hogs is as scanty as those of the Society Islands; but they received from the English some valuable additions to their stock, both of vegetables and animals. Their domestic fowls are as large as those of Europe. Among the birds are parrots and parroquets, of various sorts, which furnish the red feathers, so much esteemed in the Society Isles. The numerous reefs and shoals afford shelter to an immense variety of shell-fish. Agriculture, architecture, boat-building, and fishing, are the employments of the men; to the women is confined the manufacture of cloth. These islands lie between 19. 40. and 21. 30. deg. S. lat. and between 170. and 180. of W. lon. Under the general name of Friendly Islands, are sometimes comprehended Boscawen's, Keppel's, and Prince William's Islands, and the group of the Hapae Islands, amounting altogether to about 150.

FRIESLAND, EAST, a principality of Germany, bounded on the N. by the German Ocean; on the E. by the county of Oldenburg; on the S. by the bishoprick of Munster; and on the W. and SW. by the sea and Groningen. It consists chiefly of meadow land, and is subject to Prussia. The counts of Friesland becoming extinct in 1744, Frederick II. king of Prussia, seized the country in consequence of the expectancy granted to the house of Brandenburg, in 1694, by the Emperor Leopold. George II. however, king of England, as duke of Brunswick Lunenburg, laid claim to the principality, on account of an hereditary union entered into, in 1691, with Prince Christian Eberhard, making his pretensions known to the regency of E. Friesland, and the aulic chamber of the empire; but the king of Prussia, denying the authority of the emperor of regency, and threatening to support his actions by force of arms, he was suffered to remain in possession.

FRIESLAND, WEST, one of the United Provinces, bounded on the S. and W. by the Zuyder Zee and Overijssel, on the N. by the German Ocean; and on the E. by Groningen and Overijssel. In Oostergow there is good pasturage, and some arable land; Westergow is more fenny, but abounds with fish and fowl. There is a dialect used here more nearly resembling the old English than any other in Europe. A part of North Holland is also called West Friesland.

Fryarne Manor, Middl. near Fryarne Barnet. Fryar's Place, Middl. between Acton and the Wells. Frysalk, Hants, near Whitchurch. Fryth, Middl. between Mill Hill and Barnet.

FUEGO, FOGO, or ST. PHILIP, one of the Cape de Verd Islands, in the Atlantic Ocean, higher than any of the rest, and appearing, at sea, to be one single mountain, though on the sides, there are deep valleys. There is a volcano at the top of it, which burns continually, vomiting out fire and smoke, throwing up huge pieces of rock to a vast height, and sometimes pouring vast torrents of brimstone down the sides of the hill. The Portuguese, who first inhabited it, brought negroes with them, and a stock of cows, horses, and hogs; but their descendants are not now distinguishable in their complexions from the negroes. The island is without rivers, and almost without fresh water, yet it is fertile in maize, gourds, water-melons, wild figs, oranges, and apples. A great number of goats run wild upon the mountains, and the profit on their skins is a revenue of the crown. They export, also, the skins of cattle, horses, asses, and hogs. The island is nearly 5 leagues in length, and is about 330 miles W. of Cape de Verd, and 90 W. of St. Jago. Lat. 15. 10. N. lon. 24. 20. W.

FUENTE DUENNA, a town of New Castile, situated on the Tajo, 24 miles SE. of Madrid.

FUMAY, a town in the dept. of the Ardennes, noted for quarries of excellent slates in the neighbourhood.

FUNCHAL, or FUNCHIAL, a town, capital of the Island of Madeira, situated on the S. coast, on the gentle ascent of a hill, in the form of an amphitheatre. The buildings are, in general, entirely white. The hills beyond the town are covered with vineyards, inclosures, plantations, and groves, interspersed with country-houses and other buildings. The city contains 6 parish churches and several chapels, 6 convents, and several hospitals. The streets are narrow, ill-paved, and dirty, yet all drawn by a line; the houses are also neat, being built of freestone, or of brick: but only a few of the best, which belong to the wealthier inhabitants, are provided with glass windows; the others have a kind of lattice-work in their stead, which hang on hinges, and may be lifted up occasionally. The English and French Roman Catholics, who live in the Portuguese manner, exceed the Portuguese here in numbers and opulence. There is also a great number of mulatto and negro freemen. The principal trade of the inhabitants consists in wine and sweetmeats. On the sea-side are several batteries. An old castle, which commands the road, stands on the top of a steep, black rock, surrounded by the sea at high-water, called Loo Rock. On a neighbouring eminence, above the town, is another, called St. John's Castle. Lat. 32. 38. N. lon. 16. 49. W.

Fudenhall, Norfolk, SE. of Windham.

FUNDY, a bay of Acadia, in N. America, which separates New England and the government of New Brunswick from that of Nova Scotia. It is remarkable for its tides, which rise to the height of 50 or 60 feet, and with a proportionable velocity.

FUNEN, an island in Denmark, near the entrance of the Baltic Sea, about 35 miles in length, and 30 in breadth. It is separated from jutland by a strait called the Lefs Belt, and from the Island of Zealand by another, called the Great Belt. It is remarkably fertile in pasture and grain, and exports annually great quantities of barley, oats, rye, pease, and honey. Most of the Danish nobility have seats here. Odensee is the capital.

Funtley, Great and Little, Hants, NW. of Fareham. Funumel, E. and W. Dorsetf. NE. of E. and W. Orchard. Funtolier, Northumb. part of Bothall lordship. Furbeck, Yorkf. W. Fyans Town Bridge, in Meath, Leinster, 30 miles from Dublin.

FUTTYPOUR, or FATTIPOUR SICRI, a town of Hindoostan, in the province of Agra, seated near an immense plain, in which scarcely a shrub is to be seen. The soil is light, and almost as fine as hair-powder; a circumstance productive of disagreeable effects, when this fine dust is taken up by the hot winds from the westward. The country, however, near the town, is in tolerable cultivation. It is 42 miles W. of Agra. Lat. 27. 10. N. lon. 78. 8. E.

FYAL, or FAYAL, the most westerly island of the Azores, or Western Islands, about 27 miles in length and 9 in breadth. The climate is remarkably good, and the air always pure and mild. The cold of winter is never felt here, and the heat of summer is constantly tempered by refreshing winds from the sea. This island produces plenty of pasture for cattle, and plenty of fish are caught on the coast. It is also well cultivated, and yields wheat of the bearded sort, barley, Indian corn, cucumbers, gourds, melons, water-melons, flax, lemons, oranges, plums, apricots, figs, pears, apples, cabbages, carrots, potatoes, large, sweet onions, garlic, and strawberries. There are a few vineyards on the island, but the quantity of wine is inconsiderable, and the quality indifferent. Here is also abundance of chestnuts, beeches, myrtles, and aspen trees. Their oxen are small, as are also their sheep, but the meat is very good; and they have plenty of long-legged goats, hogs, and poultry. Their horses are small and ill-looking; but asses and mules are more numerous and more serviceable in such a hilly country. Birds here are numerous, and in great variety; particularly quails, American woodcocks, Canary-birds, black-birds, and other birds of song, with a small species of hawks. The cottages of the common people are built of clay, and thatched with straw; they are small, but cleanly and cool. The most considerable, if not only town, is Villa de Horta. Lat. 38. 32. N. lon. 28. 45. W.

Fyers, a river of Invernessshire, which runs into Loch Ness, 10 miles NE. of Fort Augustus. Over this river is built a stupendous bridge, on two opposite rocks; the top of the arch being above 100 feet from the level of the water.

GALACZ, a town of Bulgaria, situated near the mouths of the Danube, 54 miles W. of Ismael.

Galashiels, a village in Selkirkshire, near the confluence of the Gala and the Tweed. A flourishing manufacture of woollen cloth is carried on here, called Galashiel's grey, being of a dark colour and coarse texture; and lately flannels and finer cloths have been tried here with tolerable success.

GALASO, a river of Otranto, in Naples, which falls into the sea near Tarento.

GALATA, the principal suburb of Constantinople, seated opposite the seraglio, on the other side of the harbour. It is inhabited by Christians and Jews, who here exercise their religious profession publicly. The houses are better built here than in Constantinople, and wine is sold in taverns, which is not allowed in the city itself.

Gatbally, in Limerick, Munster.

Galbey, Leices. S. of Billesden. Gales, Yorksh. N. Riding, W. of Ravensworth Castle.

Galey River, rises in Limerick, runs into Kerry, and falls at last into the river Feal.

GALICIA, a name given to a country in the S. and SW. of Poland, consisting of that part of Little Poland, which is S. of the river Vistula, almost the whole of Red Russia, and a slip of Podolia. It is now incorporated into the Austrian dominions under the appellation of the kingdoms of Galicia and Lodomeria. The mountainous parts produce fine pasture; the plains are mostly sandy, but abound in forests, and are fertile in corn. The principal articles of traffic are cattle, hides, wax, and honey, copper, lead, iron, and salt. It extends from E. to W. about 280 miles in length, and from 60 to 100 in breadth. Lemburg or Leopold is the capital.

GALICIA, a mountainous province of Spain, bounded on the N. and W. by the sea; on the E. by Asturia and Leon; and on the S. by Portugal. It has more harbours than any other province of Spain, and the forests yield wood for ship-building. The principal produce is wine, flax, and citrons; and here are also good pastures. The population is not numerous. The mineral productions are copper and lead; Corunna and Ferrol are the principal ports, and St. Jago di Compostella is the capital.

GALICIA, NEW, or GUADALAJARA, an audience of Mexico, which contains a province of the same name, and 5 others. The air is temperate, and there is abundance of corn and pulse; here are also mines of silver and copper. The principal towns are Zamora, Leon, Lagos, and Guanamota.

GALILEE, a province of Palestine, anciently a part of Judea. Its bounds are not exactly known.

GALISTIO, a town of Spanish Estramadura, 10 miles E. of Coria.

GALL, ST. or ST. GALLEN, a considerable town of the Thurgau, in Switzerland.

land. The inhabitants are uncommonly industrious, and carry on an extensive commerce, arising from their manufactures of linen, muslin, and embroidery. Here is a rich and celebrated abbey, whose abbot is chosen by the 72 Benedictines, who compose the chapter. The government of the town, which is entirely Protestant, is aristo-democratical; the subjects of the abbot, whose territory is distinct, are Catholics. To the library belonging to this abbey, we are indebted for the preservation of the famous writings of Petronius Arbiter, Silius Italicus, Valerius Flaccus, and Quintilian, copies of which were found here in 1413. The town is seated in a narrow, barren valley, between two mountains, 57 miles NE of Zurich. Lat. 47. 26. N. lon. 9. 20. E.

GALLA, or PUNTA DE GALLO, a Dutch settlement in Ceylon, situated in a healthy air, on the SW. coast, about 98 miles S. of Candy. The bay is said to be neither large nor convenient, and the entrance is dangerous on account of rocks.

GALWAY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Connaught, about 75 miles long, and 46 broad. It is bounded on the N. by the counties of Mayo and Roscommon; on the E. by Roscommon, King's County, and Tipperary; on the S. by Clare and Galway Bay; and on the W. by the Atlantic Ocean. It contains 28 churches, 116 parishes, about 28,212 houses, and 142,000 inhabitants. A great part of it is fertile, being a warm, limestone soil, which rewards the industry of the husbandman and shepherd, but is very coarse towards the N. and W. and, in those parts, rather thinly inhabited. The western coast contains many well-sheltered harbours, and is mostly bordered with green islands and rugged rocks.

GALWAY, a town of Ireland, in a county of the same name, of which it is the capital. It is advantageously situated for foreign trade on Galway Bay, in the Atlantic. The salmon and herring fisheries are carried on here with great spirit, and employ several hundred boats; the quantity of kelp manufactured and exported is considerable, and the increase of the linen manufacture, though of late introduction, is become very important. It is 49 miles WSW. of Athlone, and 108 W. by S. of Dublin.

GALWAY BAY, a large bay on the coast of Galway, Connaught. The N. side of it is foul and dangerous for vessels; but it is more safe on the S. side. Small ships only can sail up to the town of Galway.

GAMBIA, a large river of Africa, which falls into the Atlantic Ocean. The source is not known, but it is navigable for sloops about 600 miles up the country. At the mouth of the river the land is low, but, higher up, the country is rocky and mountainous, and covered with woods. Along it's banks are great numbers of towns inhabited by various nations. The Arabic language and Mahometan religion generally prevail in the country N. of this river: on the S. the inhabitants are Pagans. The Gambia annually overflows it's banks, like the Nile. The mouth is in lat. 13. 28. N. and lon. 16. 20. W.

GANDICOTTA, a town of Hindoostan, in the circar of Cuddapa, situated on or near the river Penner, 33 miles NW. of the town of Cuddapa. Near it is a diamond mine.

Ganford, Durh. near Barnard Castle.

GANGES, a large and celebrated river of India, has its source in two springs, near Mount Kentaiffe, in Thibet; the streams of which, after running 500 miles in a western direction, inclining to the N. turn to the S. unite their waters, and form what is properly called the Ganges, from the Hindoo word Ganga, which signifies the river. This great body of water now forces a passage through Mount Himmaleh, (a chain or ridge of mountains extending from Cabul along the N. of Hindoostan, and through Thibet) and tapping it's very foundations, rushes through a cavern, and precipitates itself into a vast basin, which it has worn in the rock, at the hither foot of the mountains. From this second source (as it may be termed) of the Ganges, it takes a SE. direction through the country of Sirinagur, until, at Hurdwar, it finally escapes the mountainous tract in which it has wandered about 800 miles. From Hurdwar, where it enters the plain country, it flows with a smooth, navigable stream, during the remainder of it's course to the Bay of Bengal, which it enters by several mouths. In it's course through these delightful plains, it passes by Furrackabad, Allahabad, Benares, Patna, &c. and receives 31 rivers, some of which are equal to the Rhine, and none smaller than the Thames, besides others of inferior note. In the annual inundation of this immense river, the country is overflowed to the extent of more than 100 miles in width; nothing appearing above water but villages and trees, excepting, very rarely, the top of an elevated spot, the artificial mound of some deserted village, which appears like an island. The rise of the water is on an average about 31 feet. The Ganges is a most beneficial river, diffusing plenty by means of it's living productions, enriching the lands, and affording an easy conveyance for the produce of it's borders. The Hindoos hold it's waters in high veneration. It is visited annually by pilgrims from all parts of Hindoostan, and happy are those accounted whose lot it may be to perish in it's streams.

GANJAM, a town of Hindoostan, in Cicacola, one of the northern circars, subject to the English. It lies on the Bay of Bengal, near the SW. end of the Chilka Lake. Lat. 19. 22. N. lon. 85. 20. E.

GANNA, a small town in the dept. of Allier, 30 miles nearly S. of Moulins.

Gannow, Worces. N. of Bromsgrave.
Gannon, Yorks. near Scarborough.

GAP, a town in the dept. of the Upper Alps, before the Revolution, capital of a country called the Gapençois, about 27 miles long and 18 wide. It is seated at the foot of a mountain, in which are found mineral waters that are deemed antiseptic. The town was taken by the Duke of Savoy, in 1692, and a great part of it burnt down. Lat. 44. 34. N. lon. 6. 10. E.

GARD, a department of France, bounded on the N. by the departments of Lozere and Ardeche; on the E. by the Rhone, near it's mouth; on the S. by the Mediterranean and part of the dept. of Herault; and on the W. by the departments of Lozere, Aveyron, and Herault. Nîmes is the principal town.

GARD, PONT DE, an ancient Roman aqueduct in France, nine miles NE. of Nîmes, erected, it is supposed, by Agrippa, in order to convey to Nîmes the water of the spring of Eure, which rises near Uzes. It is 160 feet in height, and consists of three bridges, reared one upon another, so as to unite two craggy mountains. The uppermost of these bridges has six arches of great blocks of stone, without cement; the centre bridge, on which this stands, has eleven, and the lowest (under which runs the Gard, an inconsiderable but rapid river) has thirty-six arches. Louis XIV. when he repaired, in 1699, the damages which this stupendous work had sustained by time, caused a real bridge, over which travellers now pass, to be constructed by the side of the lower range of arches.

GARDA, a town of Italy, in the Veronese; and a lake between the Veronese and the Bressian, about 30 miles long, and from 2 to 7 wide.

GARDELEBEN, a town in the Old Marche of Brandenburg, which trades in cloth of it's own manufacture, hops, and excellent beer. It is seated on the river Baïse, 32 miles N. by W. of Magdeburg. Lat. 52. 41. N. lon. 11. 35. E.

GENEP, a town in the ci-devant Austrian Brabant.

GENEVA, an ancient, large, and populous city and republic, on the confines of France, Savoy, and Switzerland. It is seated at the SW. extremity of the lake of the same name, and is divided by the Rhone, which passes through the lake, into two unequal parts. Geneva, which lies partly in the plain on the borders of the lake, and partly on a gentle ascent, is irregularly built. The houses are lofty; and many that stand in the trading parts of the city, have arcades of wood, which are raised even to the upper stories. These arcades, supported by pillars, give a gloomy appearance to the street, but are useful to the inhabitants in protecting them from the sun and rain. It contains about 24,000 people; but the territory or district is small. They are in alliance with the Swiss Cantons, and after various revolutions, with which they have been agitated from time to time, for near two centuries, the democrats, in 1789, prevailed over the aristocracy of which the senate and syndics, or chief magistrates, were composed. A constitution was lately established here, favourable to the rights of the people, and perhaps judiciously modelled between the two extremes; but it now forms an integral part of the French empire. The citizens of both sexes are remarkably well instructed, "and it is not uncommon," says Dr. Moore, "to find mechanics, in the intervals of labour, amusing themselves with the works of Locke, Montesquieu, Newton, and other similar productions. It is 40 miles NE. of Chamberry, and 126 NW. of Turin. Lat. 46. 12. N lon. 6. 10. E.

GENEVA, LAKE OF, an expanse of water between Switzerland and Savoy, extending from Geneva to Villeneuve, 54 miles in length, and 12 in breadth, in it's widest part. From Geneva to the environs of Lausanne, the country slopes for a considerable way, to the margin of the lake, and is enriched with a variety and profusion of natural beauties. Near Lausanne, the banks rise considerably, and form a terrace; a few miles beyond the town is a rapid descent. The colour of the water is extremely beautiful, clear, and at a distance seems of a fine blue. The depth is various; the greatest yet found, by sounding, is 160 fathoms. It abounds in fish, remarkable as well for their excellence as size. Like all inland lakes, inclosed within high mountains, it is subject to sudden storms. Among the birds which frequent this lake, are the tippet grebes, which appear only in the winter. They are obliged to build in other places, this lake being almost destitute of reeds and rushes, in which they form their floating nests.

GENIS, a town in the dept. of Mont Blanc, seated on the river Guier, 12 miles W. of Chamberry.

Gennis, Cornw. NE. of Boscastle.

GENOA, a city of Italy, capital of a republic of the same name. It is about 10 miles in circumference, and built like an amphitheatre. The houses are five or six stories high, and well built, and the palaces and public buildings are numerous. The harbour is large and good, and, to preserve it, they have built a mole 560 paces in length, 13 in breadth, and 15 feet above the level of the water. It is populous, and one of the most commercial places in Italy. They have manufactures in velvet, plush, damask, and silk; and the banking business is carried on extensively. The ordinary revenue of this republic is about 200,000*l.* a year. The government is purely aristocratic. There is a great council, consisting of 80 persons, chosen out of the old and new nobility, in whom the legislative authority resides, but the administration of affairs is vested in a senate, consisting of a doge, and 2 senators. The nobility are often employed in trade, and generally keep two or three years' provision of corn, wine, and oil in their magazines, which they sell to the people in scarce times. The Genoese fleet, anciently celebrated for it's victories over the Saracens, Pisanes, Venetians, Spaniards, and Turks, and a long time masters of Sardinia, Malta, Majorca, Minorca, Candia, Cyprus, the Crimea, and other places in the Archipelago, is now reduced to six galleys. Genoa was bombarded by the French, in 1684, and taken by the Austrians, in 1746; the oppression of these last, however, was such, that the inhabitants suddenly rose and expelled their conquerors, who again besieged the city the next year, but without effect. It is 62 miles SE. of Turin, and 224 NW. of Rome.

GENOA, the republic, extends along the Gulf of Genoa for about 120 miles; but it's breadth is unequal, varying from 8 to nearly 20 miles. On the land side it is bounded by Piedmont, Montferrat, Milan, Placentia, Parma, and Modena. It is populous, populous, well cultivated, and fertile near the sea; but the inner parts are mountainous and barren.

GEORGIA, a fertile country of Asia, called by the Persians Gurgistan, and by the Turks Gurtshi, is situated between the Black and Caspian Seas, and comprehends the ancient Iberia, and part of Colchis. It is surrounded by the Russian government of Caucasus, Circassia, Daghestan, Schirvan, and Armenia. It is divided into 9 provinces. Of these, 5 form the kingdom of Georgia; the other 4 form the principality of Imeritia. The hills are covered with forests of beech, oak, ash, chestnuts, walnuts, and elms, encircled with vines, growing spontaneously, and producing vast quantities of grapes. Cotton also grows spontaneously, as well as the finest fruit trees. Rice, wheat, millet, hemp, and flax, are raised on the plains, almost without culture. The valleys afford fine pasturage, the rivers are full of fish, the mountains abound with minerals, and the climate is delicious. The rivers, however, being fed by mountain torrents, are always too rapid or too shallow for the purposes of navigation. Georgia was formerly one kingdom, the inhabitants of which were Christians; but, since 1639, when it was conquered by the Persians, the country is divided between two native princes, by themselves called kings, but by the sophi styled governors. Each of these has a guard of Mahometan horse in their pay. The Georgians are skilled in the use of the bow, and are thought to be the best soldiers in Asia. Their dress resembles that of the Cossacks; but those that are wealthy affect the habit of the Persians. They usually dye their hair, beards, and nails red. The women, who are celebrated for their beauty, stain the palms of their hands of the same colour, and paint their eyebrows black, in such a manner as to form one entire line, while the rest of the face is coated with white and red. Being generally educated in convents, they can read and write, qualifications uncommon with the men, even of the highest rank. The inhabitants are Christians, partly of the Greek, partly of the Armenian church. Here are also Tartars, Ossis, Armenians, and a considerable number of Jews. Of these last, some have villages of their own; others are mixed with the Georgian, Armenian, and Tartarian inhabitants, but never with the Ossi. They pay a small tribute above that of the natives. There are only four considerable towns, Teflis, Gori, Suram, and Ali.

GEORGIA, the most southern of the United States of N. America, is bounded on the E. by the Atlantic Ocean; on the S. by E. and W. Florida; on the W. by that part of Louisiana which lies to the E. of the river Mississippi; and on the N. by S. Carolina and the Tennessee government. It extends about 420 miles from E. to W. and from 140 to 240 from N. to S. It contains contains nearly 90,000 souls, and is divided into 11 counties, namely, Chatham, Effingham, Burke, Richmond, Wilkes, Liberty, Glynn, Camden, Washington, Greene, and Franklin. The whole coast is bordered with islands, which, as well as the continent, being well-wooded, the channel between them is extremely pleasant. The principal towns are Augusta, Savannah, Brunswick, Sunbury, Frederica, Washington, and Louisville. The principal rivers are the Savannah, Ogeechee, Alatomaha, St. Mary, &c. The winters in Georgia are mild and pleasant, ice and snow being seldom seen. The soil varies according to situation, and different degrees of improvement. By culture are produced rice, indigo, cotton, silk, Indian corn, potatoes, oranges, figs, pomegranates, &c. Rice, at present, is the staple commodity; but great attention begins to be paid to the raising of tobacco. Augusta is the capital.

GEORGIA, SOUTH, the principal of a cluster of islands in the S. Atlantic Ocean, discovered by Captain Cook, in 1775, and so named by him. It is 31 leagues long, and its greatest breadth is about 10. It abounds in bays and harbours, which the vast quantities of ice render inaccessible the greatest part of the year. Two rocky islands are situated at the N. end, one of which was a craggy cliff, nearly perpendicular, containing the nests of many thousand hags; the other was called Bird Island, from the innumerable flocks of birds seen near it, from the largest albatrosses down to the least peterels. Several porpoises and seals were also observed. Here are perpendicular ice cliffs of considerable height, like those of Spitsbergen. From these, pieces were continually breaking off, and floating out to sea: the valleys were covered with snow, and the only vegetation observed, was a bladed grass growing in tufts, wild burnet, and a plant like moss. Not a stream of fresh water was to be seen on the whole coast. A great number of sea-calves and sea-bears were found, and flocks of penguins, some of which weighed 38 pounds, and measured 3 feet 3 inches in length. The only bird seen appeared to be a species of the lark: no quadruped was found. These islands lie between 53. 57. and 54. 57. S. lat. and between 38. 13. and 35. 34. W. lon.

GERMANY, a country of Europe, bounded on the W. by Swisserland, France, the Belgic Provinces, and the German Ocean, on the N. by Slefwick and the Baltic Sea; on the E. by Prussia, Poland, and Hungary; and on the S. by Hungary, the Adriatic, Italy, and Swisserland; being about 640 miles in length, and 550 in breadth. The air is temperate and wholesome, and the productions are various. Germany contains many princes, secular and ecclesiastic, who are independent of each other; and there are great numbers of free, imperial cities, which are so many little republics, governed by their own laws, and united by a head, who has the title title of emperor. The prerogatives of the imperial dignity were formerly much more extensive than they are at present. At the close of the Saxon race, in 1024, the emperors exercised the right of conferring all ecclesiastical benefices in Germany, of receiving their revenues during a vacancy; of succeeding to the effects of intestate ecclesiastics; of confirming or annulling the election of the popes; of assembling councils, and of appointing them to decide on the affairs of the church; of conferring the title of king on their vassals; of granting vacant fiefs; of receiving the revenues of the empire; of governing Italy as it's proper sovereigns; of erecting free cities, and establishing fairs; of assembling the diets of the empire, and fixing the time of their duration; of coining money, and conferring the same privilege on the states of the empire; and of administering justice within the territories of the different states. About the year 1437, however, the emperors were reduced to the power of conferring all dignities and titles, except the privilege of being a state of the empire; of appointing once, during their reign, a dignitary in each chapter, or religious house; of granting dispensations with respect to the age of majority; of erecting cities, and conferring the privilege of coining money, and of calling the meetings of the diet, and presiding in them. The electors of the empire are 3 ecclesiastical, namely, the archbishops of Treves, Cologne, and Mentz; and 5 secular, namely, the king of Prussia, as elector of Brandenburg; the king of Great Britain, as elector of Hanover: the present emperor, as king of Bohemia; the elector of Saxony; and the elector palatine of the Rhine. Each elector bears the title of one of the principal officers of the empire; the elector of Hanover, for instance, being "arch-treasurer and elector of the holy Roman empire." To prevent the calamities of a contested election, a king of the Romans has often been chosen in the life-time of the emperor, on whose death he succeeds to the imperial dignity as a circumstance of course. Although chief of the empire, the supreme authority resides in the diets, which are composed of 3 colleges; that of the electors, that of the princes, and that of the imperial towns. When that of the electors and that of the princes disagree, that of the towns cannot decide the difference; but they are obliged to give their consent, when they are of the same opinion. The diets have the power of making peace or war, of settling general impositions, and of regulating all the important affairs of the empire. But their decisions have not the force of law till the emperor gives his consent. All the sovereigns of Germany have an absolute authority in their own dominions, and can lay taxes, levy troops, make alliances, &c. provided they do not prejudice the empire. They determine all causes, definitively, unless in some particular cases, in which an appeal may be made. These appeals are to two courts, called the Imperial Chamber and the Aulic Council. Germany is divided into 9 circles, each of which comprehends several other states; the princes, prelates, and counts of which, with the deputies of the imperial towns, meet together about their common affairs. Each circle has one or two directors and a colonel; the directors have a power of convoking the assembly of the states of their circle, and the colonel commands the army. The 9 circles are those of Austria, Bavaria, Suabia, Franconia, Upper and Lower Rhine, Westphalia, and Upper and Lower Saxony. The principal rivers are the Danube, Rhine, Elbe, Weser, Maine, and Oder. The language of Germany is a dialect of the Teutonic, which succeeded that called the Celtic. The 3 principal religious professions are the Romish, Lutheran, and Calvinistic. The first prevails in the dominions of the emperor, in the ecclesiastical electorates, and in Bavaria; the second in the circles of Upper and Lower Saxony, great part of Westphalia, Franconia, Suabia, the Upper Rhine, and in most of the imperial towns: the third in the dominions of the landgrave of Hesse Cassel, and of some other princes.

GHEHT, a considerable city of the ci-devant Austrian Flanders, containing 6 parish churches, besides the cathedral, a great many religious houses, and about 70,000 inhabitants, but not populous in proportion to its extent, which is so great, that Charles V. is reported to have said to the French king, Francis I. "I have a glove," (the French name for Ghent being gand, a glove,) "in which I can put your whole city of Paris." The city is divided by canals into 26 islands, and over the canals there are 300 bridges. The streets are large, and the market-place is spacious. They have flourishing manufactures of silk, woollen, linen, and a great trade in corn. There is a large canal which passes from Ghent to Bruges, and thence to Ostend; and another, which passes to Sas de Ghent. GHERIAH, a town of Hindoostan, situated on the W. side, or Pirate Coast, in the country of Concan. It was the principal port of Angria, a famous piratical prince, whose fort here was taken, and his whole fleet destroyed, by Admiral Watson and Colonel Clive, in conjunction with the Mahrattas, in 1756. It is about 80 miles NNW. of Goa. Lat. 16. 45. N. lon. 73. 7. E.

GHILAN, a beautiful province of Persia proper, extending along the SW. coast of the Caspian Sea, and supposed to be the Hyrcania of the ancients. It has Schirvan to the N. Aderbeitzan and part of Irac-Agemi to the W. and Mezanderan to the SE. and is about 200 miles long, and 150 broad. The sea forms its boundary on one side, and on the other are high mountains, covered with various sorts of fruit-trees. In the highest parts of them are deers, bears, wolves, leopards, and tigers, which last, the Persians have, it is said, a method of taming, and hunt with them as with dogs. It is extremely fertile, producing silk, oil, wine, rice, tobacco, mulberry berry, box, walnut trees, and excellent fruits in abundance. This province was ceded to Russia in 1723, but not formally annexed to the Russian dominions till 1780. Reshd is the capital.

GHILAN, ST. of GUISLAIN, a town in the dept. of the North, seated on the river Haine, 5 miles W. of Mons.

GIBRALTAR, a town of Andalusia, in Spain, near a mountain of the same name, formerly called Calpe, which, with Mount Abyla, on the opposite shore of Africa, were called the Pillars of Hercules. It has been in the possession of the English since the year 1704, who keep a garrison here; which is copped up in very narrow limits, and receives supplies of provisions from England and Barbary. The town is so strong by art and nature, as probably to bid defiance to the utmost efforts of an enemy. Here are upwards of 300 pieces of cannon mounted on the works. Gibraltar contains several streets, one of which is pretty spacious and well paved; the others are narrow and dirty. It has also 3 gates. It is built at the foot of a barren rock, or craggy hill, which rises about 1400 feet above the level of the sea, in a peninsula, which can be approached only by a narrow passage, between the mountain and the sea. Across this isthmus the Spaniards have drawn a fortified line, to prevent the garrison from having any communication with the country. The English here, exclusive of the garrison, amount to about 2000, and the Spaniards, Portuguese, Genoese, and Jews to as many more. Here is one English and one Spanish church, and a Jews synagogue. The road here is no safe against storms, nor convenient for refitting vessels, though they may be laid on their sides for careening; the harbour is formed by 2 moles, one of which is 300 feet in length. On the summit of the rock is a plain, where there is a fine prospect of the sea, on each side the Strait, of Barbary, Fez, and Morocco, and of Seville and Granada, in Spain. The Strait of Gibraltar is about 24 miles in length, and 15 in breadth, and a strong current always runs through it from the ocean to the Mediterranean. Gibraltar is 25 miles N. of Ceuta, and 49 SE. of Cadiz. Lat. 36. 6. N. lon. 5. 22. W.

GIUSTENDIL, 2 towns of Bulgaria.

GLACIERS, a name given to some extensive fields of ice in Switzerland. The Glaciers may be divided into two sorts; the Lower, occupying the deep valleys situated in the bosom of the Alps, and termed, by the natives, Valley of Ice; and the Upper, which clothe the summits and sides of the mountains. The Lower Glaciers are the most considerable in extent and depth, some stretching several leagues in length. At the higher extremity, they are bordered by inaccessible rocks, and on the other extend into cultivated valleys. The thickness of the ice varies from 80 to 100 feet, and in some parts extends to upwards of 600 feet. These immense fields of ice usually rest on an inclined plain being pushed forward by the pressure of their own weight, and but weakly supported by the rugged rocks beneath, they are intersected by large transverse chasms, and present the appearance of walls, pyramids, and other fantastic shapes, observed at all heights and at all situations, wherever the declivity exceeds 30 or 40 degrees. But in those parts, where the plain on which they rest is horizontal, or only gently inclined, the surface of the ice is nearly uniform; the chasms are few and narrow, and the traveller crosses on foot without much difficulty. The surface of the ice is not so slippery as that of the frozen ponds or rivers; it is rough and granulated, and is only dangerous in deep descents. The following is a simple and natural theory relative to the formation of the Glaciers. An immense quantity of snow is continually accumulating in the elevated valleys, inclosed within the Alps, as well from that which falls from the clouds, during nine months in the year, as from the masses which are incessantly rolling from the steep sides of the circumjacent mountains. Part of this snow, which is not dissolved during summer, impregnated with rain and snow-water, is frozen during winter, and forms that opaque and porous ice of which the Lower Glaciers are composed. The Upper Glaciers may be subdivided into those which cover the summits, and those which extend along the sides of the Alps. Those which cover the summits owe their origin to the snow that falls at all seasons of the year, and which remains nearly in it's original state, being congealed into a hard substance, and not converted into ice; for, in so cold a region, there cannot be melted a quantity of snow sufficient to impregnate with water the whole mass which remains undissolved. The substance which clothes the sides of the Alps is neither pure snow, like that of the summits, nor ice which forms the Lower Glaciers, but is an assemblage of both. It contains less snow than the summits, because the summer heat has more power to dissolve it, and because the liquified snow descending from above, the mass is penetrated with a larger quantity of water. It contains more snow than the Lower

Glaciers,

Glaciers, because the dissolution of the snow is comparatively less. Hence the ice is even more porous, opaque, and less compact than the ice of the Lower Glaciers; and is of so doubtful a texture, as renders it, in many parts, difficult to decide whether it may be called ice or frozen snow. Thus there is a regular gradation from the snow on the summits, to the ice of the Lower Glaciers, formed by the intermediate mixture of snow and ice, which becomes more compact and less porous in proportion as it approaches the Lower Glaciers, until it unites and assimilates with them.

Gladmore, Herts, near Hadley. Glaif-ton*, Rutland, near Bisbrook. Glamford, Norf. SW. of Clay.

GLAMORGANSHIRE, a county of South Wales, bounded on the N. by Carmarthenshire and Brecknockshire, on the E. by Monmouthshire, and on the S. and W. by the Bristol Channel. It extends from E. to W. 48 miles, and 26 from N. to S. it is divided into 10 hundreds, which contain 1 city, 8 market towns, 118 parishes, about 10,000 houses, and 58,000 inhabitants. On the N. side of this county, where it is mountainous, the long continuance of the snow renders the air sharp; but the country being more level on the S. side, it is there milder, more pleasant, more populous, and bears large crops of corn, with remarkably sweet grass; whence it has been called the Garden of Wales. Cattle abound in all parts, there being fruitful valleys among the mountains, that yield very good pasture. Here are also lead, coal, iron, and limestone. It's principal rivers are the Rumney, which separates it from Monmouthshire, the Teafe, Elwy, Neath, Ogmere, Avon, Cledaugh, and Tawy. Cardiff is the principal town, and Swansea the most commercial one; but the assizes for the county are held at Cowbridge.

Glanbeby, in Kerry, Munster. Glandore, in Cork, Munster. Glandore Harbour, 2 leagues W. of the Galley Head, or Rois Bay, in Cork, Munster. This harbour is a remarkably good one, though small. Glancerragh, in Kerry, Munster. Glanervey, or Glenarvey, in Antrim, Ulster, 77 miles from Dublin. Glanflesk, in Kerry, Munster.

Glanmis, in the SW. of Angusshire.

*GLANDFORD BRIDGE, a town of Lincolnshire, with a large manufactory of skins, and a considerable trade in corn, coals, and timber. It is seated on a river, or navigable canal, called Ancholme, or Ancam, 23 miles N. of Lincoln, and 156

N. by W. of London. Market on Thursday.

Glangariff Bay, in Cork, Munster. Glangowra, in Cork, Munster. Glanmire, in Cork, Munster, on the river Glanmire, in a fertile tract of uneven country, about 3 miles from the city of Cork. It's environs exhibit a variety of extensive prospects richly diversified. Glanmore, in Kilkenny, Munster, 76 miles from Dublin. Glanorga, in Limerick, Munster.

Glanthis, SW. and Glanthon, SE. of Alnwick, in Northumberland.

Glanthon, in Cork, Munster, 135 miles from Dublin. Glanworth, in Cork, Munster. Glansyfrebane, in Cork, Munster.

GLARIS, or GLARUS, one of the thirteen cantons in Switzerland, entirely surrounded by the Alps, except toward the N. It has the canton of Schweitz on the W. and the Grisons on the E. It is a cold, mountainous country, yet affording cattle, cheese, butter, and a prodigious variety of uncommon plants, minerals, metals, crystals, medicinal springs, petrifications, and large slates. The government is, or lately was, perfectly democratic; every person, at the age of sixteen, has a vote in the landsgemeind, or general assembly, which is held annually in the month of May, in an open plain, according to the custom of the ancient Gauls and Germans. This assembly ratifies new laws, lays contributions, enters into alliances, declares war, and makes peace. The executive power, however, is vested in a landrath, or council, composed of 48 Protestant members, and 15 Roman Catholics. The landamman, or chief of the republic, is chosen alternately from among the Protestants and Romanists, who live together here in great harmony, amicably fill together the chief offices of state, and successively make use of the same house for their assemblies for public worship. The population amounts to about 16 or 17,000 souls.

GLARIS, a large and populous town of Switzerland, capital of the canton of the same name, seated on the river Linth, 18 miles E. of Schweitz. Lat. 46. 56. N. lon. 9. 1. E.

GLASENDORF, a town of Nieffe, in Silesia.

Silesia; and a town of Koniginstratz, in Bohemia.

GLASGOW, a city of Scotland, in the county of Lanerk, which, from it's extent, and from the beauty and regularity of it's buildings, may justly be esteemed the second city in the kingdom. The streets are clean and well paved, and several of them, intersecting each other at right angles, produce a very agreeable effect. The four principal streets thus divide the city nearly into four equal parts; and the different views of them, from the cross, or centre of intersection, have an air of magnificence. Here are a few magnificent public buildings, and several charitable establishments, particularly the Merchant's Hospital, and that of the town. Here is a celebrated university; the single college belonging to which is an elegant and commodious building. The number of inhabited houses in it, is upwards of 10,000, and it contains near 62,000 inhabitants. A considerable trade was formerly carried on here in tobacco and rum, but it has been lately on the decline. Their cotton manufactures rival those of Manchester in cheapness and elegance; and, before the late universal check to that branch of business in both kingdoms, it is said, that cotton goods were manufactured in Glasgow and it's vicinity, to the annual amount of 2,000,000*l.* sterling. A pottery is likewise carried on here, that emulates, in beauty and elegance, the Staffordshire ware. Printing-types are well executed here, and the glass manufactory has been very successful. Here are also manufactures of coarse earthen ware, hats, stockings, gloves, ropes, cordage, &c. Glasgow has the advantage of two canals, besides the Great Canal, that joins the Clyde to the Forth. It's proper river, the Clyde, has, at a great expence, been made navigable, within the last 30 years, for vessels drawing 7 feet 6 inches water. It is seated on the N. bank of the above river, over which it has two stone bridges, (one of them an elegant, new one of 7 arches, 500 feet long and 32 wide; it was completed in 1772) 10 miles SW. of Dumbarton, and 35 W. of Edinburgh. Lat. 55. 52. N. lon. 4. 2. W.

GLASGOW PORT, a town on the S. side of the Clyde, erected in 1710, in order to serve as the sea-port of the city of Glasgow. It has an excellent harbour, with a grand pier; but still most of the ships that trade to the W. Indies, sail from Greenock, and return to that port. The herring-fisheries in the Firth of Clyde, form a considerable part of it's trade. This port is situated 21 miles W. by N. of Glasgow.

Glasfon, Cumb. in the parish of Boulnefs. Glasfon, or Glasfon Castle, Lanc. SE. of Dalton. Glassenbury, Kent, in Cranbrook parish. Glassenhye, Cumb. near Kirk Oswald.

Glasglough, in Monaghan, Ulster. Glastonwin, in Dublin. It is an agreeable village, situated on a rising ground, 2 miles from the city of Dublin.

GLASTONBURY, a pretty large and well-built town of Somersetshire, principally consisting of two streets, in both of which are many houses, either entirely built, or patched up, with stones from it's abbey; formerly the most magnificent in the world, the domains and revenue of which were immense. It was anciently called Avalonia, or the Isle of Avalon, into which no person whatever, not even a bishop, or prince, was allowed to enter, without leave from the abbot, to whom this power was granted by Canute the Dane. There were 61 abbots, who sat among the barons in parliament, and governed it successively for near 600 years. Richard Withing, the last, for refusing to surrender his abbey to Henry VIII. and acknowledge his supremacy, was condemned at Wells, and carried, with two of his monks, on a hurdle, to the Tor, or St. Michael's Tower, a high hill, in the neighbourhood, where he was hanged in his robes. His head was stuck up over the gate of his abbey, and his body, quartered, was exposed, in like manner at Bath, Wells, Bridgewater, and Ilchester. Extensive ruins of this immense range of buildings are still remaining; but they have been much diminished for the sake of the stones, as every cottage hereabouts has part of a pillar, door, or window of this fabric: however, the curious structure, called the Abbot's Kitchen, is yet entire, and is of a very unusual contrivance, being built of stone, without any combustible material; as are also some fragments of the church and St. Joseph's chapel. The walls that remain are overgrown with ivy, and the aspect of the whole is, at once, melancholy and venerable. The principal manufacture here is stockings. Nearly adjoining, on a high, steep hill, is placed the tower of a church, the Tor above mentioned, which lifts it's head into the clouds, and is an object of admiration to travellers, and even serves as a landmark to seamen in the Bristol Channel. It is situated in a low, marshy country, nearly encompassed encompassed with rivers, 6 miles SW. of Wells, and 129 W. by S. of London. Market on Tuesday.

Glatendon, Northumb. in the barony of Wark. Glating, Suffex, NW. of Midhurst. Glatton, Huntingd. NW. of the Saltreys, GLATZ, a town of Silesia, formerly of Bohemia, containing about 400 houses within the walls, and as many in the four suburbs. It is capital of a mountainous, but fertile principality, of the same name, about 45 miles in length, and 25 in breadth, which was ceded to the king of Prussia, in 1742, by the queen of Hungary. It has mines of coal, silver, and iron, good quarries, and plenty of cattle, with several mineral springs. The town of Glatz is a place of considerable trade, and is situated on the side of a mountain, on the summit of which is a large and strong castle, near the river Neisse, 45 miles SW. of Breslaw, and 82 E. by N. of Prague. Lat. 50. 21. N. lon. 16. 40. E.

Glaxley, Shrop. near Chelmarsh. Gleason, Lanc. near Dalton. Gledles, Derby. in Scarisdale. Gledles, York. SE. of Sheffield. Glediborp Grange, Nottingh. NW. of Edwinstow. Glemisford, Suffolk, between Clare and Lentham. Glen, a river of Northumberland, which runs through Glendale into the Till.

Glenarm, in Antrim, Ulster, on the Bay of Glenarm, 105 miles from Dublin.

GLENCOE, THE VALE OF, in Argyleshire, noted for the military execution of it's unsuspecting inhabitants, by a party of English soldiers, in 1691, in consequence of an order signed by King William, in council, for that purpose, and contrary to the faith of a royal proclamation. The male part of the inhabitants had many of them been in arms for the abdicated King James II.

Glencowen, a river of Cumberland, which runs into the Ulles Water on the S.

GLENCROY, THE VALE OF, a wild and romantic valley in Argyleshire.

Glendale, Northumb. on the Glen.

Glendalagh, otherwise called the Seven Churches, a beautiful valley in Wicklow, Leinster, nearly surrounded by inaccessible mountains, and containing two lakes, and extensive ruins of the city of Glendalagh, which was formerly a bishoprick, with an episcopal jurisdiction, extending to the walls of Dublin. It is 5 miles NW. of Rathdrum.

Glinville, in Cork, Munster.

Glocester, Northumb. on the coast near Anbell. Glossop, Derb. in the High Peak.

GLOUCESTER*, a large, clean, populous, and considerable city, of Gloucestershire, containing 5 parish churches, besides it's ancient and magnificent cathedral. It is well built, and has been lately much improved: it's four principal streets are greatly admired for the regularity of their junction in the centre of the town; besides which there are several smaller ones, all well paved. Here is a good stone bridge over the Severn, the lowest down that river, with a quay, wharf, and custom-house. Gloucester has a flourishing manufacture of pins, and is seated on the E. side of the Severn, where, by it's two streams, it forms the Isle of Alney, 25 miles NE. by N. of Bristol, and 106 W. by N. of London. Market on Wednesday. Fairs on April 5, July 5, Sept. 28, and Nov. 28, the latter chiefly for fat hogs.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the W. by Monmouthshire and Herefordshire; on the N. by Worcestershire; on the E. by Warwickshire and Oxfordshire; and on the S. by Wiltshire and Somersetshire. It extends from NE. to SW. more than 60 miles, but is not more than 26 in breadth. It is divided into 13 hundreds, which contain one city, 27 market towns, 280 parishes, 1229 villages, about 26,760 houses, and 162,560 inhabitants. The soil and appearance of this country vary in different parts, but the air is healthy throughout; sharp in the E. or hilly part, which contains the Cotswold Hills, but mild in the rich Vale of Severn, which occupies the centre. The W. part, which is the smallest district, is varied by hill and dale, and chiefly occupied by the Forest of Dean, which was once full of oak-trees; but the iron-works have consumed a great part of them. The staple commodities are cheese, cyder, perry, bacon, grain, and fish, besides it's manufactures of woollen cloths, hats, leather, paper, bar iron, edge tools, nails, brads, &c. It's rivers are the Severn, the Warwickshire Avon, the Lower Avon, the Wye, Thames, Coln, Lech, Windrush, Evenlode, Churn, Leden, Swillate, Caron, and Stour.

GLOUCESTER, a county in the state of Rhode island; a town of New Jersey, situated on the Delaware; and a town of Virginia, situated on the N. side of York River.

GLOUCESTER ISLAND, an inhabited island in the S. Pacific Ocean, about 8 miles long and 1 wide. The men appeared armed with long pikes or poles. Lat. 19. 14. S. lon. 140. 4. W.

GLOUCESTER ISLANDS, two islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, about 6 leagues distant from each other. One of them is in lat. 20. 38. S. lon. 146. 0. W. and the other in lat. 20. 34. S. and in lon. 146. 15. W.

GLOGAW, a fertile principality of Silesia, on both sides of the Oder, on the borders of Poland. It is divided into six circles. Great Glogaw (which contains 2 catholic churches, one of which is collegiate, 3 convents, a Lutheran church and school, and a chapel for Calvinists) situated on the S. side of the Oder, in the capital.

GLOGAW OBER, a town of Oppeln, in Silesia.

GLOMME, a river of Aggerhuys, in S. Norway, which passes by Elvedal, Koningssuinger, &c. and flows into the North Sea near Frederickstadt. From the outlet of Lake Mioss to Frederickstadt, it's streams are intercepted by such frequent cataracts and shoals, as, in some places, to render it necessary to drag the trees, which are floated down, over the ground. About 30,000 trees are annually floated down this river to Frederickstadt.

Glowston, Leic. S. of Hallaton. Glusburne, Yorks. S. of Skipton. Glunius, Cornw. near Penryn. Glyford, Cornw. SE. of Bodmin. Glyman, Corw. near Columb Magna. Glyne, Suffex, S. of Lewes. Glyneburn, Suffex, near Lewes.

Glynn, or Glin, in Limerick, Munster. Glyn of Agerlow, and Glyn Caum, in Cork, Munster. Glyn of the Downs, a romantic dale in the county of Wicklow, Leinster, so narrow as to admit of little more than the road which passes through it, and the small, gurgling river which runs near the side of it. It is 13 miles from Dublin. Glyn Wood, in the parish of Donoghmore, in Down, Ulster.

Gnarmack, Cornw. NW. of Truro.

GNESEN, or GNESNO, a town, late of Kalisch, in Poland, but now of West Prussia.

Gnostall, Stafford. upon Rowley Water, between Knightley and Wilbrihton.

GOA, a large and well built city, on the W. coast of Hindoostan, capital of the Portuguese settlements in India, and the seat of a viceroy. It contains about 20,000 inhabitants, of whom the native Portuguese amount to a very small number, and stands on an island, of the same name, about 24 miles in circumference, separated from the continent, by a fine river, called MANDOVA, capable of receiving ships of the greatest burden, which lie within a mile of the town. This noble port, which is, by nature, one of the best in the Indies, (and the Portuguese have spared no pains to heighten and improve it's natural advantages) as well as the whole island, is defended by many castles and towers, furnished with abundance of cannon. Beyond these castles, the channel becomes narrower, sometimes to 1, sometimes to 2 miles; and it's banks are planted with the best fruits and finest trees India affords. Eight miles up is the city of Goa. Half way up, on the right side, is a palace, formerly the seat of the viceroys, but it now serves as barracks for the garrison. The buildings are of stone, and splendid, with numerous convents, nunneries, and ecclesiastical houses. The viceroy's palace is a grand building, erected over one of the gates of the city, which leads to a spacious street, terminated by a beautiful church. Here is also a stately hospital; and in the shops about the market-place may be had the produce of Europe, China, Bengal, and other countries. In the houses they generally make use of clear oyster-shells, instead of glass, for windows. The air within the town is unwholesome, but the banks of the river are pleasant, and adorned with many handsome structures. From Old Goa to the new city, there is a commodious road, elegantly adorned with trees for fruit and shade. The soil of the island is fertile, especially in the valleys; the trees are always covered with leaves, flowers, and fruit, and a great number of springs issue from the mountains. The tract between the town and the sea is thickly planted with villages and fine seats, and abounds with tropical trees and fruits. Though the houses here make a showy appearance, they are but poorly furnished. The inhabitants live chiefly on greens, fruit, roots, bread, rice, and fish, though they have hogs and fowl in plenty. Goa has few manufactures, or productions for commerce; their principal trade is in arrack, which they distil from the sap of the cocoa-nut tree. It has been in the hands of the Portuguese since the year 1510, when it was taken by General Albuquerque. Lat. 15. 28. N. lon. 73. 45. E.

GOA, a town of the Island of Celebes, near the S. coast, in lat. 5. 12. S. and lon. 129. 30. E.

Goadby, Leicesters. NW. of Hallaton.

Goadby, Leic. N. of Walton on the Woud.

Gobblecote, Herts, near Tring.

GOBIN, ST. See FERÉ.

Gobions, Magna, Essex, in the liberty of Havering.

GOCH, a town of Cleves.

GOCIANO, a town and district of Sardinia.

*GODALMIN, a town of Surry, noted for licorice, excellent carrots, and peat, that burns as well as pit-coal. Here is a manufactory of stockings; as also of mixed kerseys, and blue ones, that are not to be matched for colour. The country about it is agreeably diversified with hills and gentle uplands. It is seated on several streams of the river Wey, (which abounds with good fish, especially pike, and which drives one grist-mill, two paper-mills, and three corn mills) 4 miles SW. of Guildford, and 34 SW. of London, on the road to Portsmouth, Market on Wed.

GODAVERY, GUNGA, or GODOURY, a river of Hindoostan, which rises about 70 miles NE. of Bombay, and after crossing Dowlatabad, and part of Golconda, falls into the Bay of Bengal by several mouths, in lat. about 16. 40. N. and lon. 82. 20. E.

Goddington, Kent, in Frensbury parish.

Goddington, Oxf. NE. of Bicester. Godley, Chesh. SE. of Druckenfield. Godlingstone, Dorset. in Purbeck Isle, and Swanwich parish.

GODMANCHESTER, a town, or large village, of Huntingdonshire, parted from the town of Huntingdon by the river Ouse, but united to it by a bridge and short causeway, which form a part of the post-road between London and Edinburgh. It is inhabited by a great number of yeomen and farmers, who are said to have extraordinary teams of horses, no town in England keeping more ploughs at work than this hath done. They formerly received the kings, who passed that way, with a display of their instruments of agriculture, exhibiting, at one time, to James I. when he passed through it, nine score ploughs, adorned with trappings, &c.

Godmanham, York. between Beverley and Pocklington. Godmanston, Dorset. NW. of Frampton, 1 mile from Nether Cerne. Godmersham, Kent, on the river that runs from Wye to Canterbury. Godneston, Kent, a manor of Sittingbourn. Godolphin, Cornw. situated on a hill, E. of Mount's Bay, 4 miles from Market Jew, famous for it's tin mines.

Godhill, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina.

*Godstone, Surry, E. of Blechingley.

Godslow, NW. of Oxford, in a sort of island formed by the divided streams of the Isis, after being joined by the Evenlode. This place is noted for the catching and dressing of fish. Here are an arched gateway, and the venerable ruins of the nunnery, with it's conventual church, which Fair Rosamond quitted for the embraces of Henry II. Godswick, Nott. W. of Elmham. Gofford Green, Warwick. E. of Coventry. Gofforth, Cumb. near Ponsby.

GOES, or TER GOES, a town in the United Provinces, in Zealand, capital of the Island of S. Bevelandt. It communicates with an arm of the Scheldt, by a canal, and carries on a considerable trade in salt, grain, &c. It is 10 miles NE. of Flushing.

Gogmagog Hills, 3 miles from Cambridge, near Newmarket and Balsam.

GOGRA, DEWAH, or SOOR JEW, a large river which rises in Thibet, and forcing it's way through Mount Himmaleh, crosses the country of Oude, and unites with the Ganges, about 15 miles W. of Patna.

GOHUD, a circar, or territory of Hindoostan, in the province of Agra, subject to a rajah, who is tributary to the Poonah Mahrattas. It's capital, which is of the same name, is about 55 miles SSE. of Agra.

Goit, a river of Cheshire, which runs into the Mersey, 3 miles E. of Stopford. Goit Hall, Chesh. NE. of Stockport.

GOITO, a town of Mantua.

GOJAM, a flat country of Abyssinia, about 25 leagues long, and 14 wide. It is almost surrounded by the Nile, and abounds in pastures.

Gokewell, Linc. NW. of Glandford Bridge. Goland, Cornwall, near Fowey. Golborn, Chesh. SW. of Tattenhall. Golborn, Lanc. near W. Derby.

GOLCONDA, a country of Hindoostan, bounded on the N. by Berar, on the E. by the 5 Circars, on the S. by Mysore and the Carnatic, and on the W. by Dowlatabad and Viliapour, subject to the Nizam of the Deccan. The great rains which fall in June, part of July, August, September, and October, swell the rivers here to a dangerous degree of depth and rapidity, but render the land exceedingly fertile; especially in fruits. The inhabitants make white wine of their grapes, and have yearly two crops of rice and other grain. The diamond-mines here are reckoned the most considerable in the world. The black merchants usually buy parcels of ground to search for these precious stones in. They sometimes fail in meeting with any; and at others they find immense riches. They have also mines of salt and fine iron; and manufactures of curious calicees and chintses. Hyderabad is the capital, but the city and fortress of Golconda was formerly the residence of the kings of this country.

GOLDBERG, a town of Lignitz, in Silesia.

Goldbrooke, Suffolk, near Eye. Goldcliff, Monmouths. on the S. side of the county.

GOLD COAST OF GUINEA, a maritime country of Africa, in which are more forts and factories of European nations, than in any other part of the coast of Africa. It reaches from the river Suera da Costa on the W. to the river Volta on the E. and includes several districts, in which are two or three towns or villages, scattered along the sea-shore. The whole Gold Coast is about 180 miles in length. The negro merchants here are generally very rich, and trade with Europeans in gold. The domestic animals are bulls, cows, sheep, and goats; the last of which are innumerable, and their flesh is excellent. The beef and mutton, however, are not good. The principal countries are Ancobar, Axem, Anta, Commenda, Fetu, Sabo, Adom, Agouna, Acra, Acam-bore, Labadde, Fantin, Incassan, Ningo, and Sabre.

Goldcot Park, Warw. near Stratford upon Avon.

GOLPHINTON, a town of Georgia, in N. America.

Golfury, or Golfanny, Cornwall, near Mount's Bay and St. Hilary. Goldthern Hill, Staff. S. of Wolverhampton. Goldthorp, Yorks. W. of Doncaster.

GOMBROON, or GAMBRON, a sea port of Laristan, in Persia, called also Bandar Abassi, seated on a bay 9 miles distant from the island of Ormus. The best houses here are built with bricks dried in the sun, and are flat at the top, with a square turret, having holes on each side for a free passage of the air. Those who stay in town during the summer sleep upon these roofs. Other houses, or rather huts, are made with the boughs of palm-trees, and covered with leaves. The soil around it is barren, but provisions, brought from other countries, are plentiful. Through all the 17th century, and at the beginning of the last, this town was the port of Schiras, and of all the S. part of Persia. At present, however, trade is very low here, nor is there a single European counting house in the city. The Dutch for a while continued to trade here, but since they formed a settlement in the Island of Kerek, they have entirely deserted Gombroon. Lat. 27. 20. N. lon. 57. 0. E.

GOMERA, one of the Canary Islands, about 20 miles long, and 10 wide, lying between Ferro and Teneriffe, about six leagues SW. from the latter. It is well cultivated and fertile, producing abundance of sugar-canes, fruits, and wine, with corn enough to supply the wants of the inhabitants. Its capital, of the same name, is situated on the E. coast, and has an excellent harbour, better than in any of the other islands, where the Spanish West India fleets often stop to take in provisions and refreshments. Lat. 28. 6. N. lon. 17. 8. W.

GOMERA, a river of Fez, which runs into the Straits of Gibraltar, near the town of Velez de Pegnon.

Gomersel, Yorkf. W. of Wakefield.

GONAIVES, LÉS, a sea-port town of the Island of St. Domingo, situated near a medicinal spring, with an excellent harbour, in lat. 19. 36. N. and lon. 73. 40. W.

GONAPI, or GOUNONG API, one of the small Banda Islands, in the Eastern Indian Ocean. It's only inhabitants are wild hogs, cows, and serpents. In the middle of it is a volcano.

Gonalston, Nottingh. SE. of Sherwood Forest.

GONDAR, a town of Africa, the metropolis of Abyssinia, situated on a hill of considerable height, and containing about 10,000 families in time of peace. The houses are chiefly of clay, and the roofs thatched in the form of cones, the usual construction within the tropical rains. On the W. end of the town is the palace, or king's house, which, with it's contiguous buildings, is surrounded by a substantial stone wall, 30 feet high, with battlements and a parapet, by which you can go along the whole. The inhabitants are of an olive complexion, and profess Christianity. Their patriarch depends upon that of Alexandria; but they appear as jealous of the European Christians as of the Musselmans. They have no shops, but expose their merchandise to sale, upon mats, in a large square; gold and rock-salt form their medium of barter. The habit of the better sort is made of silks and cottons, but the common people wear nothing but drawers. It is 180 miles SE. of Sennar, and near 1000 S. of Grand Cairo. Lat. 12. 34. N. lon. 37. 33. E.

GONDEGAMA, or GONDACOMMA, a river of Hindoostan, which rising near Combam, forms the nominal boundary of the Carnatic on the N. and enters the Bay of Bengal at Medipilly, or Mootapilly.

GONNESSE, a town in the dept. of Seine and Oise, remarkable for the goodness of it's bread. It is seated on the river Crould, 9 miles N. of Paris.

GONNEVILLE, a town in the dept. of the Lower Seine, 16 miles N. of Montvilliers.

Goodale House, Yorkf. in Holderness, W. of Hornley Mere. Gooderston, Norf. between Downham and Watton.

GOOD HOPE, CAPE OF, the most southerly point of the continent of Africa, and very rocky, lies in 34. 29. S. lat. and 18. 23. E. lon. Upwards of 30 miles to the N. of it is the Cape Town, which is neat and well built, rising in the midst of a desert, encompassed by black and dreary mountains. The public offices of the Dutch East-India company are situated next the water, and the private buildings lie beyond them on a gentle ascent. The streets are broad and regular, intersecting each other at right angles; and the houses are mostly built of stone, cemented together with a glutinous kind of earth, which serves as mortar, and afterwards is neatly plastered and whitewashed with lime. The religion of the slaves is as little regarded here as in the colonies of other European states. They are treated, however, with humanity, and are lodged and boarded in a spacious house, where they are kept at work. The slaves, a few Hottentots excepted, were originally brought from the E. Indies, and principally from Malacca. Another great building serves as an hospital for the sailors belonging to the Dutch E. India ships, which touch here. It is situated close to the company's garden, and is an honour and ornament to the town: the convalescents have free access to these gardens, where they enjoy the benefit of a pure, wholesome air, perfumed by the fragrance of a great number of rich fruit trees, aromatic shrubs, and odoriferous plants and flowers; they have likewise the use of every production in it. This garden for it's handsome, pleasant and well-shaded walks, is much frequented by persons of every description, but particularly by the fashionable and gay. The inhabitants, indeed, in general, are extremely fond of gardens, which they keep in excellent order. The heavy draught work about the Cape is chiefly performed by oxen, which are brought to an uncommon degree of docility and usefulness. The inhabitants, in general, travel in a kind of covered waggon, drawn by oxen, which better suit the roughness of the country, than more elegant vehicles; but the governor, and some of the wealthier people, keep coaches, which are much in the English style, and are drawn by six horses. There are two churches here, one large, plain, and unadorned, for the Calvinists, the prevailing sect; and a smaller one for the Lutherans. The lower parts of the houses here are uncommonly neat and clean, both in appearance and reality, but the upper apartments are said to be barely and badly furnished. The streets seem much on a par with the latter, being rough, uneven, and unpaved. Many of the houses, however, have a space flagged before the door, and others have trees planted before them, which form a pleasant shade, and give an air of novelty to the streets. The only landing place is at the E. end of the town, where there is a wooden quay, which runs some paces into the sea, with several cranes on it, for the convenience of loading and unloading the boats that come alongside. Close to this quay, on the left hand, stands the castle, and principal fortrefs; a strong, extensive work, having excellent accommodations for the troops, and for many of the civil officers belonging to the colony. Within the gates, the Dutch East-India company lately had their principal stores; which were spacious as well as convenient. This fort covers and defends, the E. part of the town, and harbour, as Amsterdam Fort does the W. part. The latter, which has been built since Commodore Johnstone's expedition, and wherein both French and Dutch judgment have been united, to render it effectual and strong, is admirably planned, and calculated to annoy and harass ships coming into the bay. Some smaller detached fortifications extend along the coast, both to the E. and W. and make landing, which was not the case before the American war, hazardous and difficult. In a word, Cape Town, is, at this time fortified with strength, regularity, and judgment. The ground behind the town gradually rises on all sides toward the mountains, called the Table Mountain, which is the highest; the Sugar Loaf, so named from it's form; the Lion's Head; Charles Mount; and James Mount, or the Lion's Rump. The view from the Table Mountain is extensive and picturesque; and all along the valleys are scattered a number of fine plantations. The cultivated country, beyond the mountains is of great extent, and forms six different establishments. The soil is uncommonly productive, and the climate benign and favourable to vegetation. The spring commences here in October. Provisions are very reasonable at the Cape. A late traveller says, that he saw 13lb. of mutton sold for about 6d. sterling; a whole ox for two guineas and a half, or three guineas; and corn and other things in proportion. Fish, and game brought from the country, are in great abundance. In September, 1795, the town and colony surrendered to an English squadron, under Sir G. K. Elphinstone, seconded by about 8000 land forces under Majors General Clarke and Craig, on terms of capitulation. The loss of the English amounted to only four men killed, and a few officers and men wounded.

Goodleigh, Devonf. near Sherwell. Goodmanham, Yorkf. E. Riding, NE. of Market Wighton. Goodrich, Heref. 3 miles from Monmouth. Goodrich Castle, Heref. near Ross. Here is one of the grandest views on the Wye. A noble bay spreads before the eye, formed by a reach of the river. The bank on the right is steep, and covered with wood, beyond which a bold promontory shoots out, crowned with a castle rising among trees. Goodrington, Devonf. in Paynton parish.

GOODWIN SANDS, noted sand banks off the coast of Kent, lying eastward of the Downs, and about 4 or 5 miles from the S. Foreland. As they run parallel with the coast for 3 leagues together, at the distance of 4 or 5 miles from it, they add much to the security of the Downs, as a road, as they break off the force of the sea on the E. and S. and SW. but when the wind blows hard at SE. or at E. by N. or ENE. ships are often driven from their anchors, and are either forced on these sands, or obliged to take shelter in Sandwich Bay, or Ramsgate Pier. These sands occupy the space that was formerly a large tract of low, marshy ground, belonging to Goodwin, earl of Kent, father of King Harold, and was afterwards given to the St. Augustin monastery at Canterbury; but the abbot, neglecting to keep in repair the wall that defended it from the sea, the whole tract was inundated. Great part of it is dry at low water.

Goodwinston, Kent, near Feversham. Goodwood, Suffex, near Chichester. Goodworth, Hants, near Whorwell.

GRAVESEND, a town of Kent, consisting chiefly of one paved and lighted street. It is a place of considerable resort, being a common landing place for seamen and strangers in their passage to London. It is commonly called the corporation of Gravesend and Milton, these two places having been incorporated by Queen Elizabeth. In the reign of Richard II. the French and Spaniards came up the Thames, burnt and plundered it, and carried away most of the people; and, by way of compensation for this loss, he granted the remaining inhabitants the exclusive privilege of carrying passengers, between this place and London, in large and commodious boats, at twopence a-head, or a whole boat's fare at four shillings. They still enjoy this privilege; but the fare is now ninepence a-head, and the boats are much improved. For it's better security, Henry VIII. raised a blockhouse, with a platform of guns to the E. of the town. The gardens round the town are so rich, that they not only supply the shipping, and all the towns for several miles round, with every article of that kind, but great quantities, and particularly of asparagus, remarkably fine, are sent to London. The chief employment of the labouring people is the spinning of hemp, to make nets for fishing, and ropes. GREENLAND, a country, including some islands, situated between the Straits of Davis and Frobisher, and Iceland. The northern limits are as yet unknown. W. Greenland seems to be the most N. easterly part of America. E. Greenland lies in a high latitude, N. of the continent of Europe, as does also Spitzbergen, which is sometimes comprehended under the general name of Greenland. The seas on the coast are annually visited by a great number of ships of the English and other European nations, for the purpose of fishing for whales. The most southerly point of land in W. Greenland, is Cape Farewell, at the entrance of Davis' Straits, in lat. 59. 38. N. and in lon. 42. 45. W. The Greenlanders are strangers to trade, arts, and sciences. They are generally short, or under the common size, but well-proportioned, fat, and plump. Their clothing is made of the skins of the rein-deer, the dog-fish, and of certain birds sewed together, with the small guts of the canis marinus. It is very seldom that they are afflicted with epidemical diseases, but the scurvy is the reigning distemper in this country; their common remedy on this occasion, besides other simples, is scurvy-grass. Both sexes live together in a very sordid, filthy manner, in two sorts of habitations, one of which serves for the winter, and the other for the summer season. The winter dwellings are large huts, seldom more than two ells above the surface of the ground; the roof is covered with turf, and the entrance is dug narrow and winding under ground. These wintry mansions are extremely warm, but stink intolerably, from the number of persons generally confined in them. Their summer habitations are light tents, made of the smooth skins of the dog-fish. The occupation of the men is chiefly fishing and hunting, for which they have very curious tackle and instruments. The boats, in which the men only row out to sea, are made of very thin, narrow boards, fastened together with whalebone, and covered with seal-skins. Only one man goes out in one of these boats, who is half covered, and so securely laced in, that the water cannot penetrate into the boat; thus equipped he will row 60 or 70 miles in a day, though he has but one bar, which is 6 or 7 feet long, and flat at both ends. Their chief commodities are blubber and whalebone, the horn of the sea-unicorn, and the skins of deer, foxes, and the dog-fish. They neither use, nor have any knowledge of money, but they fix a certain value on iron. The original inhabitants, on the first arrival of the Norwegians, in 1023, were savages, apparently of American extraction. Since the middle of the last century, the Danes have settled several colonies along the coast, and at present claim the sovereignty of the country. There is a company established at Copenhagen, which sends 3 or 4 ships every year to Greenland. The animals are deer, bears, foxes, wild fowls; and, in the water, whales and seals.

GRISONS, a people inhabiting a district of the Alps, called by the ancients Upper Rhoetia, and in alliance with the Swifs. They are divided into 3 leagues; which they denominate the Caddée, or League of God's House, formed in 1419, against the secular power of the bishop; the Grise, or Grey League, in 1424; and the League of the Ten Jurisdictions, in 1436; these, however, unite and form one republic, but have their peculiar constitutions, laws, and customs. A diet, or assembly, of the three leagues is held every year, at the towns of Hantz, Coire, and Davos, alternately. It consists of 63 deputies, and 3 chiefs. In the election of these deputies, every male of 16 years of age has a voice. The country does not produce grain sufficient for the wants of half the inhabitants; the rest they obtain from Lombardy. Their principal object is the care of their sheep and cattle. The country of the Grisons is about 27 miles in length, and is bounded on the N. by Switzerland, and a part of Germany; on the E. by the Tyrolese; on the S. by Venice and Milan; and on the W. by Switzerland. They are partly of the Church of Rome, and partly Protestants.

GUADALOUPE, one of the Leeward Islands, in the W. Islands, lying between Antigua and Dominica, in lat. 16. 20. N. lon. 62. 0. W. and subject to the French. It is about 250 miles in circumference, and is divided into two parts by a channel, in one place 4 miles over, and navigable, only for canoes, called Rivière Sale. By this strait, the sea on the NW. communicates with that on the SE. The NW. part is divided into Basseterre and Cabesterre. The SE. part is named Grande-terre; it does not, however, contain more land than the former, but its shape is more irregular. The soil is exceedingly good, and every where well watered, especially in the district of Cabesterre. On the top of a very lofty mountain, is a volcano, called La Souffriere, the two mouths of which open into a pit of sulphur. The negroes get brimstone here, which they afterwards purify and sell. The vegetables, fruits, and trees, are much the same as in the other islands, except the cinnamon-tree, balsam of the capivi, and the milk-shrub, which yields a balsamic liquor like milk. The bees here are without stings; their honey never hardens, but is always of the consistence of oil. In 1775, the exports were 188,386 quintals of sugar, 63,029 of coffee, 1438 of indigo, 1024 of cacao, and 5193 of cotton; besides hides, and other articles, and without including the barter with Martinico, and other islands. HANS TOWNS, or HANSEATIC UNION, a name given to a confederacy of several sea-ports of Europe, which formed, at the time, the principal part of the commerce of Europe. This association extended from the North Seas and the Baltic, along the whole coast of Europe to Messina in the Mediterranean, and included it in cities of Poland, Norway, Germany, Holland, England, France, Spain, Portugal, and the different states of Italy. The design of this association was, at first, their common defence against the pirates, who were numerous in the North Seas and the Baltic; for a time they were much encouraged by the different governments of Europe, Europe, and had considerable privileges granted them. In the year 1200, there were seventy-two cities in the list of Hans Towns; and so powerful was this alliance, that their ships were often hired by different princes to assist them against their enemies; at length they grew so formidable, particularly from the 14th to the 16th century, as to give umbrage to several princes, who commanded all the different cities within their jurisdiction to withdraw from the union. This immediately separated the cities of England, France, Spain, and Italy, from the Hans. These, on the other hand, excluded several others, and put themselves under the protection of the empire, making a decree that none should be admitted into their society, but such cities as stood within the limits of the German Empire. For a while the confederacy was thus continued where it had first begun, but was at length reduced to Bremen, Lubeck, Hamburg, and Dantzick, each of which cities now carries on a separate trade for itself.

HARTLAND, a town in Devonshire, partly concerned in the herring fishery on this coast. It is seated on the Bristol Channel, near a promontory called Hartland Point, 28 miles W. of Barnstaple, and 218 W. by S. of London. Market on Saturday.

Hartlebury, near Worcester. Hartlebury, 4 miles from Gloucester.

HARTLEPOOL, a pretty, large, sea-port town, of the county of Durham, seated on a promontory, partly surrounded by rocks and hills, and partly by the sea. It has a safe harbour, where the Newcastle and Sunderland colliers generally take shelter in stress of weather. It has a considerable fishery on the coast, and they export a good deal of coals and lime. It is 16 miles SE. of Durham, and 254 N. by W. of London. It's market, on Saturday, is much decayed.

Hartley, a river in Northumberland, which runs into the S. Tyne, at Fetherstonehaugh. Hartley, Kent, SW. of Cobham.

Hartley, Northumb. on the coast, N. of Tinnmouth. Here are salt, copperas, and glass-works; and here is a pretty haven, or harbour, to which a canal has been cut, through a solid rock, 52 feet deep, 30 broad, and 900 long. The exports from this place, in 1776, were 70,000 dozen of bottles, 300 tons of salt, 100 tons of copperas manufactured here, and 18,000 chaldrons of coals.

HARWICH, a sea-port town of Essex, seated on a tongue, or point of land, opposite to the united mouths of the Stour and Orwell, 42 miles E. by N. of Chelmsford, and 72 NE. of London. It is not very large, but is well inhabited and frequented, and here the packet boats are stationed, that sail to Helvoetsluys, regularly every Wednesday and Saturday, if wind and weather do not prevent, in time of peace. It has a very safe, spacious, and convenient harbour, extending from the sea to within 2 miles of Ipswich, and able to receive ships of 100 guns all the way; here is also a very good dock-yard for building ships, with the necessary storehouses, cranes, launches, &c. The washing and undermining of the tides, and the falling off of large pieces of cliff, have made the point a peninsula, and, perhaps, may in time make it an island. The harbour is defended by Landguard Fort, built on a sandy point on the Suffolk side of the water, and other strong works. It is a place of considerable trade, and many vessels are employed in the North Sea fishery. Lat. 52. 0. N. lon. 1. 25. E. Markets on Tuesday and Friday.

HATVANY, a town of Hungary, 20 miles NE. of Buda.

HAVANNAH, a sea-port town of the Island

Island of Cuba, situated on the NW. part of it, opposite Florida. The harbour is capable of containing commodiously 1000 vessels, without either cable or anchor. The entrance to it is by a narrow channel, strongly fortified with platforms, works, and artillery, for at least half a mile, the length of the passage. On the E. side of the mouth of the channel is the famous Moro Fort, mounted with 40 pieces of cannon, almost level with the water; and on the opposite side a strong fort, called the Puntal, adjoining to the town. All the ships that come from the Spanish American settlements, rendezvous here on their return to Spain. In 1700, the town was computed to contain 26,000 inhabitants, Spaniards, mulattoes, and negroes; a number which must have been considerably increased since. The houses are elegant, built of stone, and some of them superbly finished; and the churches, and other public buildings are rich and magnificent. Provisions here are extravagantly dear; neither is their fresh meat of the best kinds, excepting their pork. This inconvenience is not owing to any defect in the soil of the island, but to the indolence of the Spaniards. In 1762, the Havannah was taken by an English squadron and army, under Sir G. Pocock and Lord Albemarle. The Moro Fort was taken by storm, after a siege of 29 days. Twelve men of war and three frigates were taken at the same time with the town. It was restored, however, by the peace of 1763. Lat. 23. 12. N. lon. 82. 13. W.

HAVANT, a town of Hants, containing about 500 houses. It is situated between Fareham and Chichester, 7 miles NE. of Portsmouth, and 64 W. by S. of London. Market on Saturday.

HAVERFORDWEST, a very ancient town of Pembrokeshire, containing 4 parish churches, about 600 houses and 5000 inhabitants, seated on a creek of Milford Haven, called the Dongledye, over which it has a stone bridge, 15 miles S. by E. of St. David's, and 239 W. by N. of London. It is a large, well-built, handsome place, inhabited by many genteel families; and has a considerable trade, with several vessels belonging to it. Here is also a commodious quay, for ships of burden, and a custom-house. Here the assizes are held, and the county jail is kept. Markets on Tuesday and Saturday.

Havergate, Norfolk, W. of Yarmouth.

HAVERHILL, a town of Massachusetts, 27 miles N. of Boston.

Haverholm, Lincolnf. NE. of Sleaford. Haverick, Northumberland, near Millum Castle.

HAVERILL, a town of Suffolk, partly in Essex. It has a considerable manufacture of checks, cottons, and fustians, and is 59 miles NNE. of London. Market on Wednesday.

Haverling at Bower, Essex, near Rumford. It is a most charming spot, having an extensive and beautiful prospect over a great part of Essex, Hertfordshire, Kent, Middlesex, and Surry, and also a fine view of the Thames, with the ships sailing up and down. Some parts of the walls of a palace, that seems to have been always the house of a queen consort and her jointure, are still standing here. Haver-sbam, Bucks, near Newport Pagnel. Haverstock Hill, Middl. between London and Hampstead.

HAVERSTRAW, a town of New York, 32 miles N. of that city.

HEBRIDES, or WESTERN ISLANDS OF SCOTLAND. These islands lie between the 55th and 59th degrees of N. lat. on the W. coast of Scotland, and are supposed to be about 300 in number. The principal of them are Skye, St. Kilda, Lewis and Harris, N. and S. Ulst, Cannay, Staffa, Mull, Jura, Islay, &c. which see respectively.

HEBRIDES, NEW, a groupe of islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, situated between the latitudes of 14. 29. and 20. 4. S. and between the longitudes of 166. 41. and 170. 21. E. The principal islands are Tierra del Espirito Santo and Malicollo, besides several others of less note, some of which are from 18 to 25 leagues in circumference. In general they are high and mountainous, abounding with wood and water, and the usual productions of the tropical islands. The bread-fruit, coconuts, and plantains, are neither so good nor so plentiful here as at Otaheite; but the sugar canes and yams are not only in greater plenty, but of superior quality, and much larger, some of the latter weighing 56 pounds. The inhabitants are generally of a slender make, and dark colour, and most of them have frizzled hair. Their canoes and houses are but small, and poorly constructed; and they have scarcely any manufacture, even for clothing. They generally appear civil and hospitable.

HEBRON, a town of Palestine, where the Christians have a church, built by Constantine, the walls of which are yet in existence. It is situated near the fertile Valley of Mamre, partly on a hill, and partly on a plain, 24 miles SW. of Jerusalem.

HELENA, ST. an island in the S. Atlantic Ocean, held by the English East-India Company. It's circumference is about 20 miles, and it has the appearance, at a distance, of a rock, or castle, rising out of the ocean, being only accessible at one particular spot, where the town is erected, in a valley, at the bottom of a bay, between two steep, dreary mountains. The buildings, both public and private, are plain, but neat. It has some high mountains, particularly one called Diana's Peak, which is covered with woods to the very top. There are other hills also, which bear evident marks of a volcanic origin; and some have huge rocks of lava, and a kind of half vitrified flags. The country, however, is far from being barren; the little hills are covered with rich verdure, and interspersed with fertile valleys, which contain gardens, orchards, and various plantations. The valleys are watered by rivulets, and the mountains, in the centre of the island, are covered with wood. The soil, which covers the rocks and mountains, is, in general, a rich mould, from six to ten inches deep, clothed with a variety of plants and shrubs. The walks of peach-trees are loaded with fruit, which have a peculiarly rich flavour; but the other European fruit trees and vines, which have been planted here do not succeed. Cabbages, and other greens, thrive extremely well, but are devoured by the caterpillars; as are the barley, and other kinds of grain, by the rats, which are very numerous. The ground, for these reasons, is laid out chiefly in pastures, the verdure of which is surprising; and the island can support 3000 head of their small cattle. They have English sheep here; and a small breed of horses, with goats and rabbits. Their fowls are ring pheasants, red-legged partridges, rice-birds, pigeons, &c. of some of which the breed is indigenous, but others have been brought from Europe, Africa, and the E. Indies. The number of inhabitants on the island does not exceed 2000, including near 500 soldiers, and about 600 slaves, who are supplied with all sorts of manufactures by the company's ships, in return for refreshments; and many of the slaves are employed in catching fish, which are very plentiful. This island is situated between the continents of Africa and S. America, about 1200 miles W. of the former; and 1800 E. of the latter. Lat. 15. 55. S. lon. 5. 49. W.

HELEN'S, ST. a town in E. Medina, in the Isle of Wight, with a large bay, which runs a considerable way within the land, and is capable of holding the largest fleets.

Helen's, St. near Derby. Helen's, St. Lanc. near Warrington. Heley, or Hethley, Northumb. near Morpeth. Helford, Cornwall, has a small but good harbour, on the river Hele, and the people are much engaged in the pilchard fishery. This river, the Hel, or Hele, rises in Wendron parish, whence it runs about 3 miles to the village of Guyk, whither the barks come up with the tide. About 3 miles below, it falls into the sea, forming a haven, which, within a mile of it's mouth, is deep enough for ships of 200 tons to ride in safety, and is about a mile wide at it's passage into the sea. Hegley, Norfolk, near Downham.

HELICON, MOUNT, a hill in the ancient Boeotia, consecrated to Apollo and the Muses.

HELIER, ST. the capital of the Island of Jersey, in the English Channel, on the coast of France. It is seated in St. Aubin's Bay, where it has a harbour, and a stone pier; having the sea on the SW. and hills on the N. Another large hill projects, in a manner, over the town, and has a pleasant walk, that affords an extensive prospect. The little island, St. Helier, about a mile in circuit, contains Elizabeth Castle, which is wholly occupied by the governor and garrison; it is a peninsula from half-flood to half-ebb, during which time there is a passage, called the Bridge, which is half a mile long, and formed of sand and stones. It leads to the town, which is well paved, and has wide streets. The inhabitants are computed to be 2000, and in their place of worship, the French and English languages are used alternately. Lat. 49. 11. N. lon. 2. 10. W.

HEREFORD, the capital of Herefordshire, is an ancient, decayed place. It is almost encompassed by the Wye, and two other rivers, over which are two bridges; and the only manufacture is that of gloves, and other leathern wares. It is 24 miles WNW. of Gloucester, and 130 WNW. of London. Markets on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday.

HEREFORDSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the W. by Radnorshire and Brecknockshire; on the N. by Shropshire; on the E. by Gloucestershire and Worcestershire; and on the S. by Monmouthshire, and part of Gloucestershire. It extends about 38 miles from N. to S. and 33 from E. to W. It is divided into 11 hundreds, which contain 1 city, 6 market towns, 176 parishes, 391 villages, 1500 houses, and about 90,000 inhabitants. The air is healthy, the climate mild, the soil generally fertile, producing wheat, barley, oats, clover, turnips, &c. a principal part of the land being employed in tillage; the face of the country rich, beautiful, and picturesque; and it abounds with wood. The Herefordshire cider is sufficiently celebrated, and apples grow here in great abundance, being plentiful even in the hedge-rows. The sheep are small, affording a fine silky wool, in quality approaching to the Spanish; but the superior quality of the wool not being thought adequate to atone for the smallness of the carcase, the farmers, in general, are desirous of obtaining a breed larger and more profitable. The principal rivers are the Wye, Monnow, Lug, and Frome, all of which are well stored with fish, and the salmon, in particular, is very remarkable, for, in other parts of England, they are so far out of season, after spawning, as to be unwholesome food, till they have been again at sea to recover themselves; but here they are found, fat, and fit for the table in all seasons.

Hereford, Little, Heref. on the Teme, W. of Tenbury. Herefield, Yorks. NW. of Ripley, near Patley Bridge.

HEREGOVINZA, a territory of Dalmatia.

HERSTALL, a town of Liege, situated on the Meuse, 4 miles N. of Liege. Here is a castle which belonged to Pepin, father of Charles Martel. This town was sold to the king of Prussia, in 1741.

Hersfion, Dorsetf. in Purbeck Isle, a little W. of Swanwich. Herteshewed, Yorkf. near Dewsbury. Herteshewed, Northumb. near Alaham.

HERTFORD, the county town of Herts, or Hertfordshire. It was of some note in the times of the ancient Britons; and the East Saxon kings often kept their court here. It is seated on the river Lea, which is navigable for barges, and down which vast quantities of corn and malt (about 5000 quarters per week of the latter) are sent to London. These and wool form the principal articles of the market. The situation is pleasant, dry, and healthy, and there are several public schools. In the beginning of the heptarchy, the river was navigable for ships up to the town; and, in 879, the Danes erected two forts here, for the security of their vessels, but Alfred turned the course of the river, so that their ships were left on dry ground. Hertford is much diminished in it's splendour, since the N. road was turned through Ware. It is 2 miles W. by S. of Ware, and 21 N. of London. Markets on Thursday and Saturday.

HERTFORDSHIRE, or HERTS, a county of England, bounded on the W. by Bedfordshire and Buckinghamshire; on the N. by Bedfordshire and Cambridge-shire; on the E. by Essex; and on the S. by Middlesex. It is 27 miles long from N. to S. and 33 broad from E. to W. and is divided into 8 hundreds, which contain 18 market towns, 135 parishes, 950 villages, about 16,500 houses, and 82,800 inhabitants. The northern skirt of this county is hilly, forming a scattered part of the chalky ridge, which extends across the kingdom in this direction. A number of streams take their rise from this side, which, by their clearness, shew the general nature of the soil to be inclined to hardness, and but indifferent for meadow land. Flint stones are scattered, in great profusion, over the face of the country; and beds of chalk are frequently to be met with. It is found, however, with the aid of proper culture, to be extremely favourable to corn, both wheat and barley. The western part is, in general, a tolerably rich soil, and under excellent cultivation. The principal commodities of the county are wheat, barley, malt, and wood. The air is celebrated as very wholesome; and the principal rivers are the Lea, Stort, Coln, Gade, Bean, and Rib.

HESSE, a country of Germany, in the circle of Upper Rhine, more than 80 miles in length, and unequal in breadth. It is surrounded by woods and mountains, in which are mines of iron and copper: in the middle are fine plains, fertile in corn and pastures, and there is plenty of vines, fruits, and honey; birch trees are very common, and they make a sort of wine of the sap. They likewise cultivate a large quantity of hops, and make excellent beer.

Marble,

Marble, alabaster, vitriol, sulphur, lead, alum, pipe-maker's clay, bole, &c. are also found in considerable quantities; and there are several salt springs, mineral waters, and medicinal baths. The house of Hesse is divided into two branches, namely, Hesse Cassel and Hesse-Darmstadt. In both families are princes appenaged; those of Hesse-Cassel are Hesse-Philippsthal and Rhinels. Hesse-Homburg is the only appenage of Hesse Darmstadt. Each of these have the title of Landgrave.

Heavytree, Devon. 1 mile and a half without the E. gate of Exeter; and the common place of execution to that city.

HEXHAM, a town of Northumberland, not populous, with narrow streets and ill-built houses. It's market-place, however, near the centre of the town, is a spacious square, supplied by a fountain with water. It's present church, which contains many ancient tombs, bears considerable marks of Saxon grandeur, and it was formerly famous for an abbey. The church had the privilege of a sanctuary till the reformation, (the extent of the privilege being marked by a cross, at a mile distance each way) and the Fridstol, or Stool of Peace, which, whoever took possession of, was sure of remission, is still remaining. On the screen, at the entrance of the choir, are some strange monastic paintings, called the Dance of Death. Hexham is believed to have been formerly a Roman station. It is now principally noted for it's manufactory of tanned leather, shoes, and gloves; and is situated on a small stream, called the Hextold, near the Tyne, 22 miles W. of Newcastle, and 284 NNW. of London. Markets on Tuesday and Saturday.

Hexley, Northumb. NE. of Alnwick. Hexton, Herts, near Luton in Bedford. Heybarnes, or Heymill, Herts, on the Coln, SW. of Yardley. Heybridge, Essex, on the same river, opposite to Malden.

HEYDEN, and HEYDEN BRIGG, a town of Northumberland, with a well-endowed grammar school, and a fine bridge, of 6 arches, over the Tyne. Market on Tuesday.

HIGHAM FERRERS, a small, but clean, dry, healthy, and pleasant town of Northamptonshire, with a castle near the church, the ruins of which are still visible. It is pleasantly seated on an ascent, near the river Nen, 14 miles NE. of Northampton, and 69 NNW. of London. Market on Saturday.

Higham Park, Northamp. SE. of Higham Ferrers. Higham Gobion, Bedf. SE. of Ampthill. Highgate, a large, populous hamlet, in the parishes of Hornsey and Pancras, 4 miles N. by W. of London. It has it's name from it's high situation on the top of a hill, and a gate erected there about 400 years ago, to receive toll for the bishop of London. Some of the public houses here have, or lately had, a large pair of horns placed on the sign; and when the country people stop for refreshment, a pair of large horns, fixed to the end of a staff, is brought to them, and they are pressed to be sworn. If they consent, a kind of burlesque oath is administered, that they will never eat brown bread when they can get white, and other things of the same kind, which is altered according to the sexes, and which they repeat after the person who brings the horns; being allowed, however, to add to each article the words "except I like the other better." The whole being over, they must kiss the horns, and pay a shilling for the oath. Higley, Devon. near Okeford. Higley, Northumb. N. of Morpeth. Higley, Shrop. N. of Wire Forest. Higlow, Derby.

Derby, in the High Peak. Highbam, 2 miles from Gloucester. Highbey, Huntingdon, near Bruce Castle. Higbon, Staff. SW. of Ecclethall. Higbover, Herts, NE. of Hitchin. Hightington, Worces. in Rake parish.

In this parish there is a blade-mill, at which scythes, reaping hooks, axes, hatchets, and such like tools, forged by the white-smiths, are ground to a fine edge. All these instruments are made of iron, first softened with fat, unctuous bodies, as oil, wax, suet, &c. as iron for carts, ploughshares, horse locks and shoes, nails, and buckles are of iron hardened by art.

HIMMALEH, MOUNT, a vast chain of mountains, in Asia, which extends from Cabul, along the N. of Hindooستان, and appears to be the general boundary of Thibet, through the whole extent, from the Ganges to the river Teesta, and particularly cularly separating the countries of Cachimere and Cashgar from it; inclosing between it and Hindoostan Proper, a tract of country from about 100 to 180 miles in breadth, divided into a number of small states, none of which are understood to be tributaries, or feudatories of Thibet; such as Sirinagur, Napaul, &c. This ridge was known to the ancients by the names of Imaus, and the Indian Caucasus. The natives call it Hindoo-Ko, (the Indian Mountains) as well as Himmaleh, which last is a Sanscrit word, signifying snowy; it's summit being covered with snow.

HIMS, or HEMS, a town of Syria, situated at the foot of Mount Libanus, in a plain, watered by a canal, which communicates with the Orontes, 93 miles N. of Damascus. In the neighbourhood are the remains of a castle, supposed to have been built by the ancient kings of Assyria. The inhabitants carry on a considerable traffic in silk.

HIN, a town of China, of the second rank, in the province of Chensi, 200 miles SW. of Pekin; and a town of China, of the second rank, in the province of Kiangnan, 480 miles SSE. of Pekin.

HINDON, an ancient town of Wilts, 20 miles nearly W. of Salisbury, and 97 WSW. of London. Market on Thursday.

HINDOOSTAN, a celebrated region of Asia, which, in it's most extensive signification, comprises all the countries between the mountains of Tartary and Thibet on the N.; the countries of Assam, Meckley, Aracan, and the Bay of Bengal on the E. and SE.; the Indian Ocean on the S.; and the same ocean and Persia on the W. But it may be more strictly considered under the three grand divisions of Hindoostan Proper, the Deccan, and the Peninsula. Hindoostan Proper, includes all the countries that lie to the N. of the river Nerbudda, and of the soubahs of Bahar and Bengal. The principal soubahs, or provinces, in Hindoostan Proper, are Agimere, Agra, Cashmere, Delhi, Guzerat, Lahore, Malwa, Moultan, Oude, Rohilcund, Sindy, &c. (for an account of which, see their respective names.) The term Deccan, which signifies the South, has been extended to the whole region that lies to the S. of Hindoostan Proper; but in it's most proper and limited sense, it means only the countries situated between Hindoostan Proper, the Carnatic, the Western Indian Sea, and Orissa; namely, the provinces of Candeish, Dowlatabad, Vissapour, Golconda, and the Western part of Berar. All the tract S. of the Kistna, is generally called the Peninsula. The name India, by which this country, as far as it was known, is distinguished in the earliest Greek histories, appears to be derived from Hind, the name given to it by the ancient Persians, through whom the knowledge of the country was transmitted to the Greeks. The word Hindoostan is, indeed, entirely of Persian origin, compounded of Stan, a region, and Hind, or Hindoo. The whole of Hindoostan may now be said to consist of six principal states, which hold as tributaries, or feudatories, some numerous inferior states. These six principal states are the British; the Poonah Mahrattas; the Behrar Mahrattas; Nizam Ally, soubah of the Deccan; Mysore, or the dominions of Tippoo Sultan; and the Seiks. The British possessions are Bengal, the greater part of Bahar, part of Allahabad, part of Orissa, the Northern Circars, a jaghire in the Carnatic, Baramahal, Dindigul, and some considerable countries to the N. and S. of Calicut, on the coast of Malabar, with Bombay, and the Island of Salfette. The allies of the British, who may be considered as dependent dent on them, are the nabob of Oude; the nabob of the Carnatic, including Tanjore, Madura, Tinevelly, and Marrawars; the rajahs of Travancore; and the territory of Cochin. The Indian territory held by England, either in direct subjection, or through the intervention of dependent allies, contains more than 20,000,000 of inhabitants, and yields an annual revenue of 8,000,000 sterling. For the five other principal states, see their respective names; and for an account of some inferior independent states, see BUNDELA, BALLO-GISTAN, THE JATS, ROHILCUND, &c. Exclusive of the Europeans, the inhabitants of Hindoostan are computed at 10,000,000 Mahometans, and 100,000,000 Hindoos. The Mahometans, or Mussulmans, whom the English commonly, but improperly, call Moors, or Moormen, are represented as bearing a very bad character. The Hindoos, or Gentoos, are of a black complexion, their hair long, their persons straight, their limbs neat, their fingers long and tapering, and their countenances open and pleasant. They are divided into different tribes or casts. The four principal tribes are the bramins, soldiers, labourers, and mechanics; and these are subdivided into a multiplicity of inferior distinctions. There are bramins of various degrees, who have the care of religion, or of the administration of the Gentoos law allotted to them. These priests are held sacred by the Indians or Hindoos. Those who engage in worldly pursuits are generally the worst of all the Gentoos; for, persuaded that the waters of the Ganges will purify them from their sins, and exempted from the utmost rigour of the courts of justice, (under the Gentoos governments) they run into the greatest excesses. The soldiers are commonly called Rajah-poots; that is, descendants of the rajahs. They readily enter into the service of any that will pay them, and follow wherever he leads. The English have many battalions of them in their employ, under the name of Sepoys. The labourers include farmers, and all who cultivate the land. The mechanics include merchants, bankers, and all who follow any trade; these again are subdivided into each particular branch. Besides these, there are the Parians, or Hallachores, who cannot be called a tribe, being rather the refuse or outcasts of the other tribes. They are a set of poor unhappy people, who are destined to perform the most disagreeable offices of life, bury the dead, and carry away every thing that is polluted. One description of these, or rather the outcasts of these outcasts, the Poulichees, on the Malabar coast, are held in such abomination, that if one of them happen to touch a Hindoo of a superior tribe, the latter does not scruple to draw his sabre and kill him on the spot; and for so atrocious an act, he is not even called to an account. All the different tribes are kept distinct from each other, by insurmountable barriers; they are forbidden to intermarry, to dwell together, to eat with each other, or even to drink out of the same vessel; and if they transgress any of these rules, they are obliged from that instant to join with the Hallachores. The Hindoos admit no converts, and are most firmly attached to their own superstitions, except the Hallachores, who are, some of them, glad to be admitted into any society where they are treated as fellow creatures. The Hindoos vie with the Chinese, in respect to the antiquity of their nation; and the doctrine of transmigration is one of their distinguishing tenets. Their institutions of religion form a regular and complete system, strengthened and upheld by every thing which can excite the reverence, and secure the attachment of the superstitious multitude. The temples consecrated to their deities are magnificent; their religious ceremonies splendid; and the absolute dominion which the Bramins have obtained over the minds of the people, is supported by the command of the immense revenues, with which the liberality of princes, and the zeal of pilgrims and devotees, have enriched their pagodas. The dominion of religion extends, indeed, to a thousand particulars, which in other countries, are governed by the civil laws, or by taste, custom, or fashion. Their dress, their food, the common intercourses of life, their marriages, and professions, are all under the jurisdiction of religion. The food of the Hindoos is simple, consisting chiefly of rice, ghee, (a kind of imperfect butter), milk, vegetables, and oriental spices. The warrior cast may eat of the flesh of goats, sheep, and poultry. Other superior casts may eat poultry and fish; but the inferior casts are prohibited from eating flesh or fish of any kind. Their greatest luxury consists in the use of the richest spices and perfumes, of which the great people are very lavish. They esteem milk the purest of food, because they think it partakes of some of the properties of the nectar of their gods, and because they esteem the cow itself almost as a divinity. Their manners are gentle. Their happiness consists in the solaces of domestic life; and they are taught by their religion, that matrimony is an indispensable duty in every man, who does not entirely separate himself from the world, from a principle of devotion. Their religion permits them to have several wives; but they seldom have more than one; and their wives are distinguished by a decency of demeanour, a solicitude in their families, and a fidelity to their vows, which might do honour to human nature, in the most civilized countries. The custom of women burning themselves on the death of their husbands, is still practised in Hindoostan. In 1743, near Cossimbuzar, when a widow, about 18, with three children, the eldest not 4 years of age, was strongly urged to live, for the sake of the future care of her infants; notwithstanding this, and though the agonies of death were described to her in the strongest colours, she put her finger into the fire with a calm and determined countenance, and held it a considerable time. She then, with one hand put fire into the palm of the other, sprinkled incense on it, and fumigated the Bramins. Being then told, that she would not be permitted to burn, she resolutely answered, that death was in her own power, and that if she was not allowed to burn, she would starve herself. Her friends were obliged, at last, to consent to the dreadful sacrifice of this woman, who was of high rank. But, in 1781, Mr. Hodges was witness, near Benares, to the sacrifice of one of an inferior cast, the widow of a merchant. "Repairing to the spot," says he, "on the banks of a river, where the ceremony was to take place, I found the body of the man on a bier, covered with linen, already laid at the edge of the river. At this time, ten in the morning, only a few people were assembled, who displayed the most perfect apathy and indifference. After waiting a considerable time, the wife appeared, attended by the Bramins, and music, with a few relations. The procession was slow and solemn; the victim moved with a steady and firm step; and, with a perfect composure of countenance, approached close to the body, where for some time they halted. She then addressed those who were near her, without the least trepidation of voice, or change of countenance. She held in her left hand a cocoa-nut, in which was a red colour mixed, and dipping in it the fore finger of her right hand, she marked those near her, to whom she wished to show the last act of attention. She might be about 24 years of age. Her dress was a loose robe of white flowing drapery, that extended from her head to the feet. The pile was composed of dried branches, leaves, and rushes, with a door on one side, and arched, and covered on the top; by the side of the door stood a man with a lighted brand. From the time the woman appeared, to the taking up of the body to convey it into the pile, might occupy half an hour, which was employed in prayer with the Bramins, in attentions to those near her, and conversation with her relations. When the body was taken up, she followed close to it, attended by the chief Bramin; and when it was deposited in the pile, she bowed to all around her, and entered without speaking. The moment she entered, the door was closed; the fire was put to the combustibles, which instantly flamed, and quantities of dried wood were thrown upon it. This last part of the ceremony was accompanied with the shouts of the multitude, who now became numerous, and the whole seemed a mass of confused rejoicing. In other parts of India, as the Carnatic, this dreadful custom is accompanied with still greater horror. It is asserted, that they dig a pit, in which is deposited a large quantity of combustible matter, which is set on fire, and the body being let down, the victim throws herself into the flaming mass. In other places, a pile is raised extremely high, and the body, with the wife is placed upon it, and then the whole is set on fire." In the Code of Gentoo Laws, translated by N. B. Halhead, Esq. is the following remarkable passage concerning this practice: "It is proper for a woman, after her husband's death to burn herself in the fire with his corpse. Every woman, who thus burns herself, shall remain in paradise with her husband three crore and fifty lacks of years, by destiny. If she cannot burn, she must, in that case, preserve an inviolable chastity; if she remain always chaste, she goes to paradise; and if she do not preserve her chastity, she goes to hell." This code of laws, with their sacred books, the Veidam and the Shastah, were written in the Sanscrit language, which is very copious and nervous, although the style of their best authors is wonderfully concise. Hindoostan, towards the N. is pretty temperate; but hot toward the S. and it rains almost constantly for three months in the year. It's products are rice, millet, cotton, figs, pomegranates, oranges, lemons, citrons, cocoa-trees, &c. There are mines of gold, silver, and diamonds. Beside domestic animals, here are elephants, rhinoceroses, buffaloes, lions, tigers, leopards, panthers, and monkeys, with camels and dromedaries. It's principal exports are sugar, indigo, saltpetre, silk, cotton, and precious stones; and particularly calicoes, chintzes, mullins, &c.

HINZUAN, or JOANNA, one of the Comora Islands, between the N. end of Madagascar, and the continent of Africa, has been governed, for the last two centuries, by a colony of Arabs. Some account of it has been written by Sir William Jones, for the Society for the promoting of Oriental Knowledge, of which he was president. He visited this island, on board the Crocodile frigate, in July, 1783. On anchoring in the bay, the frigate was soon surrounded by canoes, and the deck crowded with natives of all ranks, from the high-born chief, who washed linen, to the half-naked slave, who only paddled. Most of them had letters of recommendation from Englishmen, which none of them were able to read, though they spoke English intelligibly. The appearance of the island from the Bay of Hinzuan, is thus described by the same writer: "We were at anchor in a bay, and before us was a vast amphitheatre, of which you may form a general notion by picturing in your minds a multitude of hills, infinitely varied in size and figure, and then supposing them to be thrown together, with a kind of artless symmetry, in all imaginable positions. The back ground was a series of mountains, one of which is pointed, near half a mile perpendicularly high from the level of the sea, and little more than three miles from the shore; all of them richly clothed with wood, chiefly fruit-trees, of an exquisite verdure. I had seen many mountains of a stupendous height in Wales and Switzerland, but never saw one before, round the bosom of which the clouds were almost continually rolling, while it's green summit rose flourishing above them, and received from them an additional brightness. Next to this distant range of hills, was another tier, part of which appeared charmingly verdant, and part rather barren; but the contrast of colours changed even this nakedness into a beauty: nearer still were innumerable mountains, or rather cliffs, which brought down their verdure and fertility quite to the beach; so that every shade of green, the sweetest of colours, was displayed at one view, by land and by water. But nothing conduced more to the variety of this enchanting prospect than the many rows of palm-trees, especially the tall and graceful Aracas, on the shores, in the valleys, and on the ridges of hills, where one might almost suppose them to have been planted regularly by design. A more beautiful appearance can scarce be conceived, than such a number of elegant palms in such a situation, with luxuriant tops, like verdant plumes, placed at just intervals, and shewing between the part of the remoter landscape, while they left the rest to be supplied by the beholder's imagination. Neither the territory of Nice, with it's olives, date-trees, and cypresses, nor the Isles of Hieres, with their delightful orange-groves, appeared so charming to me as the view from the road of Hinzuan." The town where the king resides is at the E. side of the island; and, though it is three quarters of a mile in length, it does not contain above 200 houses. This town is close to the sea, at the foot of a very high hill. The houses are inclosed either with high stone walls, or palings made with a kind of reed; and the streets are little, narrow alleys, extremely intricate, and forming a perfect labyrinth. The better kind of houses are built of stone, within a court-yard, have a portico to shield them from the sun, and one long, lofty room, where they receive guests; the other apartments being appropriated to the women. The sides of their rooms are covered with a number of small mirrors, bits of china-ware, and other little ornaments, that they procure from the

the ships: the most superb of them are furnished with cane sofas, covered with chintz and satin mattresses. The horned cattle are a kind of buffaloes, having a large hump on their shoulders, which is very delicious eating; but there is not one horse, mule nor ass, in all the island. The original natives, in number about 7000, occupy the hills, and are generally at war with the Arabian interlopers, who established themselves on the sea-coast by conquest, and are about 3000 in number. Though Joanna is not the largest, it may be reckoned the principal of the Comora Islands; it claims sovereignty over, and exacts tribute from all the others. They have a regular form of government, and exercise the Mahometan religion; both being introduced by the Arabians. The colour of these two races of men are very different; the Arabs have not so deep a tinge as the others, being of a copper complexion, with neater features and a more animated countenance. They consider a black streak under the eye as ornamental; and this they make, every day, with a painting brush dipped in a kind of ointment. The custom of chewing the betel-nut prevails greatly here, as in most of the eastern countries; and answers to the fashion of smoking tobacco or taking snuff with us, except that with them it is more general. No one is without a purse or bag of betel; and it is looked on as a piece of civility to offer to their friend when they meet him, or take leave. Their religion licenses a plurality of wives, and likewise concubines. They are extremely jealous of them, and never allow any man to see the women: but female strangers are admitted into the haram; and, some English women, whose curiosity has led them there, make favourable reports of their beauty, and richness of apparel, displayed in a profusion of ornaments of gold, silver, and beads, in form of necklaces, bracelets, and ear-rings: they wear half a dozen or more in each, through holes bored along the outer rim of the ear. They are very temperate and abstemious, wine being forbidden them by the law of Mahomet. They are frequent in prayer, attending their mosques three or four times a day. We are allowed to enter them, on condition of taking off our shoes. In prayer the people prostrate themselves on the ground, frequently kissing it, and expressing very fervent devotion. In general they appear to be a courteous and well disposed people, and very fair and honest in their dealings, though there are among them some inclined to theft, notwithstanding the punishment of it is very exemplary, being amputation of both hands of the delinquent. The inhabitants, like those of most hot and tropical countries, are indolent, and do not improve by their labour the richness of their exuberant soil; indeed, the climate here promotes vegetation to such a degree, as requires little toil in the husbandman; and that little is denied; so that beyond oranges, bananas, pine-apples, cocoa-nuts, yams, and purslain (all growing spontaneously) few vegetables are met with. Nor are the natural beauties of the island inferior to its other advantages of plenty and fertility; the face of the country is very picturesque and pleasing; lofty mountains clothed to their very summits, deep and rugged valleys adorned by frequent cataracts, cascades, woods, rocks, and rivulets, intermixed, form the diversified landscape. Groves are seen extending over the plains to the very edge of the sea, formed principally by the cocoa-nut trees, whose long and naked stems leave a clear and uninterrupted passage beneath; while their tufted and over-spreading tops form a thick shade above, and keep off the scorching rays of the sun. HOLLAND, the most considerable of the Seven United Provinces, lying between the Zuyder Zee, the German Ocean, Zealand, Dutch Brabant, and Utrecht. It is divided into N. Holland, S. Holland, and W. Friesland; not the state or province of Friesland, but a district lying to the N. of N. Holland. These together make but one province, whose states take the title of Holland and W. Friesland. The extent is not large, being not above 180 miles in circumference. The land is almost every where lower than the sea. The water is kept out by dykes, which they are particularly careful to keep in good repair, lest the whole province should be laid under water. It is crossed by the mouths of the Rhine and Maese, by several small rivers, and by a great number of canals, on which they travel day and night at a small expence. Properly speaking, it is nothing but a large meadow, and yet all things are in great plenty, in consequence of it's trade; and the land reeds great numbers of cattle. In population, it is thought that no country in the world, of such a small extent, equals it. The pastures are so rich, that they have plenty of butter and cheese, and the seas and rivers furnish them with fish. There are, at least, 400 villages, and 29 walled towns, besides many others that enjoy municipal privileges. Six large cities have seats in the States General, viz. Dort, Haerlem, Delft, Leyden, Amsterdam, and Gouda. The number of nobility admitted into the assembly of the states of the province, is not limited, but rarely exceeds ceeds 10; they are elected by a majority of votes. The towns which have a right to send deputies are 18. The houses are generally well built, and extremely neat and clean. They have linen and woollen manufactures, beside the building of a great number of ships. The established religion is Calvinism; but all religious sects are tolerated. This was the state of the republic, prior to the disputes on the French revolution. Amsterdam is the capital.

HOLLAND, a district of Lincolnshire, in the SE. part of the county. It is divided into Upper and Lower, and reaches from Wainfleet to the Isle of Ely, and to the grounds opposite Lynn in Norfolk. In nature, as well as appellation, it resembles a province of the same name in the Netherlands. It consists entirely of fens and marshes, in which are many quicksands, some in a state of nature, but others cut by numberless drains and canals, and crossed by raised causeways. The lower, or southern division, is the most watery, and is preserved from constant inundations by nothing but vast banks, raised on the sea-coast and rivers. It was formerly impassable; but since the fens have been drained, the lands are grown more solid, and the inhabitants sow cole-seed upon them to their great advantage. Through the whole fenny district, the walls of the houses are generally of brick, and their roofs covered with slate or tile. A stone house is rarely to be seen here, and as rarely one thatched with straw, but many of those of the more opulent farmers are large and handsome. The churches are, in general, spacious, and several of them are built with excellent stone. The air is reckoned unwholesome, and the water, in general, is so brackish, as to be unfit for internal purposes; on which account, the inhabitants are obliged to make reservoirs of rain-water. In summer, vast swarms of insects fill the air and prove exceedingly offensive. Yet, even here, industry has produced comfort and opulence, by forming excellent pasture land out of swamps and bogs, and even making them capable of producing large crops of corn. The fens too, in their native state, are not without their utility, and afford various objects of curiosity to the naturalist. The reeds, with which the waters of their fens are covered, make the best thatch, and are annually harvested in great quantities for that purpose. Prodigious flocks of geese are bred among the undrained fens, forming a considerable object of commerce, as well for their quills and feathers, as for the bird itself, which is driven in great numbers to the London markets. The principal decoys, in England, for the various kinds of wild ducks, teal, widgeon, and other fowls of the duck kind, are in these parts. Wild geese, grebes, godwits, whimbrels, coots, ruffs, reeves, bitterns, and a great variety of other species of water-fowl, breed here in amazing numbers; and stares, or starlings resort hither during winter, in myriads, to roost on the reeds, breaking them down by their weight. Near Spalding, is the greatest herony in England, where the herons build together on high trees, like rooks. The avoet, or yelper, is found in great numbers about Fossdyke Wash, as are also knots and dottrels.

HOLLAND, NEW, the largest known land in the world, that does not bear the name of a continent: it extends from lat. 43. 42. S. to within 10. 30. of the equator; and from 110. 30. to 153. 30. E. lon. so that it's square surface equals, at least, if it does not exceed, the habitable part of Europe. This vast island was first discovered in the beginning of the 17th century, and then it was called Terra Australis Incognita, and long after was supposed to be part of an immense southern continent. In the year 1628, the western part was discovered by some vessels belonging to the Dutch East-India Company, and called De Wit's Land, from the name of the commodore who commanded the squadron. In 1642, Capt. Tasman was sent, by the Dutch East India Company, to survey the coast. He discovered the S. or rather the SE. extremity, which he called Anthony Van Diemen's Land, to distinguish it from Diemen's Land, on the N. coast, discovered in the year 1618. Capt. Cook, in 1770, visited the E. and NE. parts; from 38° S. and spent four months in exploring a coast about 2000 miles in length. He ascertained it's separation from New Guinea; and, in 1773, Capt. Furneaux, by connecting Tasman's discoveries with Capt. Cook's, completed the circuit. In that part of it, which Tasman distinguished by the name of Van-Diemen's Land, and which was visited by Capt. Furneaux, in 1773, and again by Capt. Cook, in 1777, the land is, for the most part, of a good height, diversified with hills and valleys. See WALES, NEW SOUTH.

It is about 70 miles in length, and 48 in breadth, and is a pleasant country, fruitful in wheat, barley, oats, beans, peas, and rape-seed, and producing horned cattle, sheep, rams, swine, horses, poultry, bears, and fish, in great abundance; it is also well suited for trade, and has some considerable harbours, particularly those of Hamburg and Lubeck. There are some imperial cities, which are governed by their respective magistrates, but the religion of the whole country is

Lutheran

Lutheran. The duchy is divided into Holstein Gluckstad, subject to the king of Denmark; and Holstein Gottorpf, subject to the emperor of Russia. The governor, appointed by the king of Denmark, generally resides at Gluckstadt, and the regency court for Russian Holstein, is held at Keil. The intended junction between the Baltic and the North Sea, will be formed entirely through Holstein and the other Danish territories.

Riding, in Lune Forest, near the Tees. Holwoodborough, Surry, S. of Dorking. Holy Cross, Staffordshire. Holy Cross, in Tipperary, Munster.

HOLYHEAD, a sea-port and cape of the Isle of Anglesea, rendered considerable by being the place where passengers usually embark for Dublin, there being packet boats that sail for that city every day, except Tuesday, wind and weather permitting. It is noted for several remains of old fortifications, one of which, called Turris Munimentum, is an old stone wall, with a small turret on it's centre; there are also some Druidical antiquities in it's neighbourhood. Under the mountains, that overhang the town, is a large cavern in the rock, supported by natural pillars, and called the parliament-house: it is accessible only by boats, and the tide runs into it. On the adjacent rocks, the herb grows of which they make kelp, a fixed salt used in making glass, and in alum works; and in the neighbourhood is a large vein of white fuller's earth, and another of yellow. On the Isle of Skerries, 9 miles to the N. is a lighthouse. Large flocks of puffins are often seen here; they all come in one night, and depart in the same manner. The commodities are butter, cheese, bacon, wild fowl, lobsters, crabs, oysters, razor fish, shrimps, herrings, codfish, whittings, sea tenches, and plenty of other fish. It is, in fact, little more than a fishing town, with three good inns, and it has a very convenient harbour for the northern trade, when taken short by contrary winds. It is situated near the extremity of the island, joined to the NW. part of it by a stone bridge, of one arch, 60 miles E. of Dublin, 24 nearly W. of Beaumaris, and 260 NW. of London. Lat. 53. 19. N. lon. 4. 34. W. A small market on Saturday.

Holy Hill, Shropshire, SW. of Bridgenorth.

HOLY ISLAND, or LINDISFARNE, a small island on the coast of Northumberland, about 6 miles SE. of Berwick, and one mile and a half from the nearest land, from whence, at low water, people ride over to it. It is 2 miles and a quarter long, and one in breadth, and consists of one continued plain. The soil is rocky and full of stones, for which reason it is thinly peopled: it has but one small town, or rather village, standing on a rising ground: it consists of a few scattered houses, chiefly inhabited by fishermen, with two inns, and a church. Under the castle, which stands at the southern point, on almost a perpendicular rock, near 60 feet high, there is a commodious bay, or harbour, defended by a blockhouse. The castle is accessible only by a narrow, winding pass, cut out of the rock, on it's southern side. The N. and NE. coasts of the island are formed of perpendicular rocks, the other sides sink, by gradual slopes, to the sand. It has plenty of fish and fowl, but the air and soil are reckoned bad. The W. part is left wholly to the rabbits, and there is not a tree on the island. The monastery, which covered near four acres, is entirely in ruins, but there are various fragments of the offices remaining. It is properly a semi-island, being encompassed with water at every flood, but sand at ebb. The E. part, which is much the broadest, is joined to the W. by a small slip of land.

Holy Island, in Clare, Munster.

HOLYWELL, a town of Flintshire, which, which, although in a great part new, is, from it's vicinity to the lead-mines, and it's considerable manufactures, become the most flourishing in the county. It takes it's name from the famous well, called St. Winifred's, concerning which so many fables and superstitious notions have prevailed. It is a copious stream of very cold and pure water, bursting out of the ground, at the foot of a hill, with such impetuosity as to discharge 21 tons of water in a minute. Over the spring there is a chapel, built by the Countess of Derby, mother of Henry VII. which stands upon pillars, and on the windows are painted the history of St. Winifred's life. Beside the cold bath, celebrated for wonderful cures, formed at the spring head, and covered with a beautiful Gothic shrine, it is now applied to the purpose of turning several mills for the working of copper, making brass wire, paper, and snuff, and spinning cotton. It is 10 miles E. of St. Asaph, and 212 NE. of London. Mark. on Friday.

Hollywell, Bedf. SE. of Flitton. Hollywell, Chesh. W. of Cholmondeley. Hollywell, Herts, near St. Alban's. Hollywell, Huntingdonshire, near St. Ives.

HONAN, a city of China, of the first rank, capital of the province of Honan. It is situated in the centre of the empire, 360 miles SSW. of Pekin.

HONDURAS, a large province of North America, bounded on the N. by the bay of the same name, on the E. by the Mosquitos shore, on the S. by Nicaragua and Guatimala, and on the W. by Guatimala and Vera Paz. This country, though exceedingly fertile by nature, is almost a desert. The soil, in many parts, bears Indian corn and grapes, three times a year; it's other produce is wheat, peas, large gourds, cotton, wool, honey, wax, and provisions of all kinds. It produces in greater abundance than any part of America, the logwood-tree, which in dying some colours, is so far preferable to any other material, that the consumption of it in Europe is considerable, and it is become an article in commerce of great value. During a long period, no European nation intruded upon the Spaniards in these provinces, or attempted to obtain any share in this branch of trade. But after the conquest of Jamaica by the English, one of the first objects of the settlers, on that island, was the great profit arising from the logwood trade, and the facility of wresting some portion of it from the Spaniards. Their first attempt was made at Cape Catoche, the NE. promontory of Yucatan. When most of the trees near this Cape were felled, they removed to the Island of Trist, in the Bay of Campeachy; and, in later times, their principal station has been in the Bay of Honduras. The Spaniards, alarmed at this encroachment, endeavoured by negotiation, remonstrances, and open force, to prevent the English from obtaining any footing on that part of the American continent. But, after struggling against it for more than a century, the disasters of an unsuccessful war extorted from the court of Madrid, in 1763, a reluctant consent to tolerate this settlement of foreigners in the heart of it's territories. This privilege was confirmed by the definitive treaty of 1783; by which, however, it was stipulated, that nothing in this concession should be considered as derogating, in any respect, from 'the sovereignty of his Catholic Majesty;' that, if the English had erected any fortifications in the country, they should be demolished, and none erected in future; and that they should confine themselves within a certain district, lying between the rivers Wallis, or Bellize; and Rio Honda, taking the course of the said two rivers for unalterable boundaries, so as that the navigation of them be common to both nations. But, by a convention signed in 1786, these limits were extended; the English line, beginning from the sea, was to take the centre of the river Sibun, or Jabon, and continue up to the source of the said river; thence to cross, in a straight line, the intermediate land, till it intersected the river Wallis; and by the centre of the same river, the said line was to descend to the point where it would meet the line already settled in 1783. By this convention, moreover, the English were not only permitted to cut logwood, but mahogany, or any other kind of wood, and to carry away any other produce of the country; with certain exceptions, however, against the establishing of any plantations of sugar, gar, coffee, &c. and they were likewise permitted, with certain restrictions, to occupy the small island called Casina, St. George's Key, or Cayo Casina. The English settlement in this country had formerly been considered as foreign; but, in 1790, by an act of parliament, they were allowed all the privileges of a British colony. The principal towns are Valladolid, the capital; Truxillo; Gracias a Dios; and St. Jago.

HONDURAS, a town of the Island of Cuba, 63 miles NE. of Bayamo.

Here is also a cold spring, which gushes out of a rock, and supplies the cold bath. In St. Vincent's Rock, above the Wells, are found native crystals, well known under the name of Bristol stones.

HOTTENTOTS, COUNTRY OF THE, a large region in the southern extremity of Africa, which extends N. by W. along the coast, from the Cape of Good Hope, beyond the mouth of Orange River, and from that Cape, in an ENE. direction, to the mouth of the Great Fish River, which parts it from Caffraria Proper. There are no considerable kingdoms throughout this large extent of country, the whole being inhabited by different tribes, or nations, governed by honquers, or chiefs, who live, like the Arabs, in huts, or portable houses, and remove their kraals, or villages, whenever the pasture becomes too bare for the subsistence of their cattle, and upon the natural and violent death of an inhabitant. The Hottentots of the Cape consist of a few paltry and miserable hordes, who have not even the power of choosing their own chief, and live, as they can, in different cantons of the colony; but the savage Hottentots, called, by way of derision, the Jackall Hottentots, far removed from the government of the Europeans, still preserve their original manners. The Hottentots, in general, are as tall as most Europeans, but more slender, and the hands and feet are small. Their skin is of a yellowish brown hue, somewhat resembling that of an European, who has the jaundice in a high degree; but this colour is not at all observable in the whites of the eyes. There are not such thick lips among the Hottentots as among their neighbours the Negroes, the Caffrees, and the Mozambiques. Their mouth is of the middling size; and they have, in general, the finest set of teeth imaginable. Their heads are covered with hair more woolly, if possible, than that of the Negroes. With respect to their shape, carriage, and every motion, their whole appearance indicates health and content. There is a volatility in their manner which shews an abundant flow of spirits, or a high enjoyment of animal life; in their intercourse with Europeans, they hardly stand still for a moment. In their mien, moreover, a degree of carelessness is observable, that discovers marks of alacrity and resolution; qualities, which, upon occasion, they certainly can exhibit, as in their encounters with lions and other wild beasts. Not only the men, but the women also are clothed with sheep-skins; the wool being worn outward in summer, and inward during the winter. They wear one skin over their shoulders, the ends of it crossing each other before, and leaving their neck bare. Another skin is fastened round their middle, and reaches down to their knees. They besmear their bodies all over, very copiously, with fat, in which there is mixed up a little foot, and this is never wiped off. They likewise perfume themselves with powder of herbs, with which they powder both the head and body, rubbing it all over them, when they besmear themselves. The odour of this powder is rank and aromatic, and comes nearest to that of the poppy mixed with spices. Some of them adorn themselves with necklaces of shells. The women cover themselves much more scrupulously than the men. They seldom content themselves with one covering, but almost always have two, and very often three. These are made of a prepared and well-greased skin, and are fastened about their bodies with a thong, almost like the aprons of European women. The outermost is always the largest, measuring from about six inches to a foot over. This is likewise, generally, the finest and most showy, and is frequently adorned with glass beads, strung in different figures. Both the men and women generally go bareheaded. Neither their ears nor nose are adorned with any pendent ornaments, as they are among other savages. The nose, however, is sometimes, by way of greater state, marked with a black streak of foot, or with a large spot of red lead; of which latter, on their high days and holidays, they likewise put a little on their cheeks. Both sexes wear rings on their arms and legs; most of these are made of thick leather straps, straps, cut in a circular shape; and these have given rise to the almost universally-received notion, that the Hottentots wrap guts about their legs, in order to eat them occasionally. Rings of iron, copper, or brass, of the size of a goose-quill, are considered as more genteel than those of leather; but the girls are not allowed to use any rings till they are marriageable. The Hottentots seldom wear any shoes; what they do wear, are made of undressed leather, with the hairy side outward: they are rendered soft and pliable, by being beat and moistened, and are very light and cool. Their habitations are some of them of a circular, and some of an oblong shape, resembling a round bee-hive, or a vault; the ground-plot is from 18 to 24 feet in diameter. The highest of them are so low, that it is scarcely possible for a middle-sized man to stand upright. But neither the lowness of the hut, nor that of the door, which is barely three feet high, can be considered as any inconvenience to a Hottentot, who finds no difficulty in stooping, and crawling on all fours. The fire-place is in the middle, and they sit, or lie round it in a circle. The low door is the only place that admits the light, and, at the same time, the only outlet that is left for the smoke. The Hottentot, inured to it from his infancy, sees it hover round him, without feeling the least inconvenience arising from it to his eyes; while, rolled up like a hedge-hog, and wrapped up snug in his skin, he lies at the bottom of his hut, quite at his ease, in the midst of this cloud, except that he is now and then obliged to peep out from beneath his sheep-skin, in order to stir the fire, or perhaps to light his pipe, or else, sometimes, to turn the steak he is broiling over the coals. The order of these huts, in a kraal, or clan, is most frequently in the form of a circle, with the doors inward; by which means a kind of yard is formed, where the cattle are kept at night. The milk, as soon as it is taken from the cow, is put to other milk, which is curdled, and is kept in a leather sack, the hairy side of which, being considered as the cleanest, is turned inward; so that the milk is never drank while it is sweet. Among other tribes of Hottentots are the Boshiesman, or Boshmans, who inhabit the mountains in the interior part of the country, NE. of the Cape of Good Hope, and are averse to the pastoral life. Some of their maxims are to live on hunting and plunder, and never to keep any animal alive for the space of one night. On this account, they themselves are pursued, and sometimes exterminated, like wild beasts, or taken and made slaves of. Bushes and clefts in rocks serve them by turns for dwellings. Many of them are entirely naked, but some of them cover their body with the skin of any sort of animal, great or small, from the shoulder downward as far as it will reach, wearing it till it falls off their backs in rags. Ignorant of agriculture, they are obliged to wander over hills and dales, after certain wild roots, berries, and plants, which they eat raw. Their table, however, is composed of several other dishes, among which are the larvæ of insects (the caterpillars from which butterflies are produced) the termites, or white ants, grasshoppers, snails, and spiders. With all these changes of diet, the Boshman is, nevertheless, frequently in want. When captured as a slave, he exchanges his meagre fare for the luxury of butter-milk, frumerty, or hasty pudding, and sometimes becomes fat in a few weeks. This good living, however, is soon embittered by the grumbling of his master and mistress, and he must frequently bear, perhaps, a few curses or blows, for neglect and indolence. Disliking labour, and, from his corpulency, become less capable of bearing it, he now pines after his former uncontrouled and wandering life, which he generally endeavours to regain by escaping. Another tribe of Hottentots, near the mouth of Orange River, have huts superior to those of the generality of Hottentots; they are loftier, and thatched with grass; and are furnished with stools made of the back-bones of the grampus. Their mode of living is, in the highest degree, wretched, and they are apparently the most dirty of all the Hottentot tribes. Their dress is composed of the skins of seals and jackals, the flesh of which they eat. When a grampus is cast ashore, they remove their huts to the place, and subsist upon it as long as any part of it remains; and, in this manner, it sometimes affords them sustenance for half a year, though in a great measure decayed, and putrified by the sun. They smear their skin with the oil, the odour of which is so powerful, that their approach may be perceived some time before they present themselves to view. They carry their water in the shells of ostrich eggs, and the bladders of seals, which they shoot with arrows, the same as the other Hottentots. Though one small hut contains the whole family, and all are obliged to repose together, they are chaste in their manners. Severe in their jurisprudence, they punish murder, adultery, and and robbery with death. From the observance of dancings or rejoicings at the full and change of the moon, they appear to be idolatrous. The country possessed by the Dutch is of pretty considerable extent, comprehending, not only the large tract, between Table Bay and False Bay, but that which is called Hottentot Holland, extending from False Bay to the Cabo dos Agulhas, or Cape of Needles, and the country farther E. beyond St. Christopher's River, called Terra de Natal. The coast of this country abounds in bays and capes; it is naturally mountainous and barren, but the industrious Dutch have overcome all natural difficulties, and it not only produces a sufficiency of all the necessities of life for the inhabitants, but also of refreshments for all the European ships that touch here. In the interior parts, however, the soil is astonishingly fertile and productive. The Dutch consider the year as divided into two seasons, which they term monsoons; the wet monsoon, or winter; and the dry one, or summer. The first begins with our spring; the latter when our summer ends. In the damp season, the Cape is much subject to fogs; and from the middle of the wet monsoon, it rains almost continually till summer: the weather is cold, raw, and unpleasant; but never more rigorous than autumn in Germany. Water never freezes to above the thickness of half a crown, and, as soon as the sun appears, the ice is dissolved. The Cape is rarely visited by thunder and lightning, excepting a little near the turn of the seasons. Among the quadrupeds of this country are antelopes, which go in herds of 20 or 30,000 each; buffaloes; giraffes, or camelopardalises; the gems-buck, or chamois, a species of antelope, which has remarkably long, sharp horns, and, when attacked by dogs, will sit on it's hind quarters, and defend itself; wild dogs, much larger than the jackal, which travel in herds, and are very destructive to flocks of sheep; elephants; elks; hyenas; the koedo, an animal of a mouse colour, rather larger than our deer, with three white stripes over the back, and the male having very large, twisted horns; lions; jackals; tigers; panthers; the quacha, a species of the zebra, but more tractable: the double-horned rhinoceros; horses; domestic horned cattle; common sheep; and a peculiar species of sheep, which are covered with hair instead of wool. The hippopotamus, or river-horse, is frequently seen here. Among the birds are vultures; ostriches, whose eggs are excellent food; and the loxia, a species of gregarious bird, which builds it's curious nest in the mimosa tree, where it forms a kind of thatched house, with a regular street of nests on both sides, at about two inches distance from each other, and containing under it's roof several hundred or a thousand birds. The termites, or white ants, which do no injury to the wood, as in the E. Indies, but only to the grass, the destruction of which they occasion, by raising a number of hills, which impede the progress of vegetation. The Hottentots eat them; and this food is found to be far from disagreeable. The locusts also are esteemed excellent food by the Boshmans, by whom they are dried and kept for use. The black, or rock scorpion, is nearly as venomous here as any of the serpent tribe, of which there are numerous kinds. There are six species about the Cape; namely, the horned snake, about 18 inches long, the most poisonous of them all; the kouise band, or garter snake, about the same length, dangerous to travellers, on account of resembling the soil so much in colour, that it is not readily perceived; the yellow snake, which differs in colour only from the hooded snake of India, and being from four to eight feet in length, their size, and bright yellow colour, renders it easy to avoid them; the puff adder, about 40 inches in length, so called from blowing itself up to near a foot in circumference: the spring adder, very dangerous, but not common, from three to four feet long, and of a jet black, with white spots; and the night snake, more beautiful than any of the others, about 20 inches long, very thin, belted with black, red, and yellow, and when near, at night, has the appearance of fire. The country of the Hottentots lies between the tropic of Capricorn, and 35 degrees S. lat. and is bounded on the W. S. and E. by the Atlantic and Indian Oceans, and on the N. by regions very little, if at all explored.

Hotton, Leic. NE. of Loughborough.

HOUANG CHEOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Tche-kiang, 580 miles SSE. of Pekin.

HOVAL, or QUALO, a kingdom of Africa, on the banks of the Senegal, extending about 90 miles from E. to W. and 18 from N. to S. The soil is fertile in maize, rice, legumes, indigo, tobacco, and cotton; the meadows feed great numbers of large and small cattle, whose flesh is excellent; game is plentiful, and birds are in the greatest number and variety; and the forests abound with palm trees.

HOVAT, an island on the coast of France, 8 or 10 miles in circumference, and about 10 miles NE. of Belle Isle.

HOUDAIN, a town in the dept. of the Pas de Calais, 6 miles S. of Bethune.

HOUDAN, a town in the dept. of the Seine and Oise, with a manufacture of woollen stockings. It is seated on the river Vegre, 10 miles S. of Mantes.

Hough, Chef. near Namptwich. Hough on the Mount, Lincoln. near Grantham. Hougham, and Little Hougham, Kent, near Dover. Hough End, Lanc. near Manchester. Houghton on the Spring, Durham, near Finchale. Houghton, Cumb. in Stanwix parish. Houghton, Norfolk, near Harpley. It is noted for it's most noble house and park. Houghton, Nott. on the Idel, 2 miles W. of Tuxford. Houghton, Yorkf. W. Riding, NW. of Tickhill. Houghton, Hants, near Stockbridge. Houghton, Derb. SE. of Bolsover. Houghton, Hunt, on the Ouse, W. of St. Ives. Houghton, Yorkf. NW. of Pontefract. Houghton, on the river Nen, S. of Northampton. Houghton, Northumb. near Chollerton. Houghton, Shropf. near Bilfen. Houghton, Durham, NW. of Darlington. Houghton, Linc. on the Witham, S. of Grantham. Houghton, Shropf. near Shefnal. Houghton, Norfolk, SW. of Great Walsingham. Houghton, Northumb. HOULSWORTHY, a town of Devonshire, situated on the river Tamer, and borders of Cornwall, 12 miles SW. of Bideford, and 215 from London. Market on Saturday.

Houlton on the Hill, Norf. 3 miles SE. of Swaffham. Houlton in the Clay, Linc. S. of Great Grimsby. Hound, Hants, between Southampton and Titchfield Bay. About 2 miles below, pleasantly situated on the Southampton river, is Nettleley Abbey, founded by King Henry III. in 1239. Part of the chapel, which appears to have been once an elegant building, is still standing, though greatly defaced. Hounden, Shropf. near Clebury. Hound Hill, Staff. near Draycot. Houndsfield, Derbyf. in the parish of Dronfield.

HOUNSLOW, a town of Middlesex, situated on the great western road, on a branch of the Coln, 10 miles W. of London. It belongs to two parishes, the N. side of the street to Heston, and the S. to Isleworth. On it's heath, which is noted for horse-races and robberies, are some powder-mills. Market on Thursday.

HOU QUANG, a province in the interior of China, having Honan to the N. and Kiangnan and Kiangsi to the E. It contains 15 cities of the first rank, and 65 of the second and third, and is mostly a champaign country, watered every where by brooks, lakes, and rivers. Here is a plenty of wild fowl and cattle; and the soil produces all sorts of grain and fruits. Gold is found in the sands of the rivers; and they have iron, tin, tutenague, wax, and such an extensive variety of other commodities, that it is commonly called the magazine of the empire.

Hourne, Surry, between Gatton and E. Grinstead. Houses, Cumb. near S. Tyne, SE. of Kirkhaugh. Housesteads, Northumb. near Chester and Busy Gap. It is noted for the ruins of Roman altars and statues, which have been dug up here in great quantities. From it is the best view of the Roman Wall. On Chapel Hill, near it, the Romans had a temple, where fragments of Doric capitals have been found, with many broken columns and several altars: and in an adjoining field, remain the visible foundations of streets and buildings. House, West, Essex, near Billericay. How, Norf. W. of Loddon. Howarby, Linc. E. of Thongcatter. Howbern, Yorkf. W. Riding, N. of Temple Brough. Howborn, Northumb. NW. of Belford. Howcaple, Heref. N. of Ross, near the Wye. Howcourt, Sussex, S. of Stening.

HOWDEN, a large town in the E. Riding of Yorkshire, noted for being the birth-place, or residence, of the historian Roger de Hoveden, or Howden. It gives name to a small district, called Howden-shire, and is seated on the N. side of the Ouse, not far from its confluence with the Derwent, and other large rivers, 23 miles W. of Hull, 16 SE. of York, and 179 N. by W. of London. Market on Saturday. Fairs on the second Tuesday in January, the Tuesday before March 25, the second Tuesday in July, and October 2.

ferry over the Ouse. Howden Park, Yorkf. between Skipton and Bradford. Howden Pains, Northumb. near Shields. Howden Price, Yorkf. near Hull. Howe, Yorkf. near Old Malton. Howe, Yorkf. N. Riding; near Skipton Bridge, over the Ouse. Howell, Linc. E. of Sleaford. Howes, Northumb. near Walls End and Newcastle. Howey, Radnorf. How End, Herts, N. of Kempton. Howfield, Kent, near Reculver. Howfield, E. of Chester. Howgate Castle, Shropf. NW. of Brown Clee Hill. Howgil, Westm. on the Lune; S. of Langdale. Howgil, Cumberl. near Whitehaven. The coal pits are carried here a great way under the sea; and the best coals obtained that are shipped from the port of Whitehaven. Howgil Castle, Westmorl. N. of Appleby, on the river Burnibek, near the Eden, and a little N. of the Maiden Way. The walls of great part of this structure are near 11 feet thick; and underneath it are vaults and cellars arched over with stone. Howgrave, Yorkf. W. Riding, S. of Skipton Bridge, over the Ouse. Howick, Monm. N. of Chepstow. Howick, Northumb. NE. of Alnwick, where an old tower, noticed by Leland, yet exists, and is kept in good repair. Howker, Lanc. SW. of Cartmel. Howland, Upper and Lower, Yorkf. S. of Barnetsey. Howle, Lanc. between Ecclestone and the Ribble. Howlets, Kent, SW. of Beaksbourn. Howley Hall, Yorkf. near Wakefield. Howly, a river in Chesh. which runs into the Pever, below Wyrningham. Hown, Yorkf. S. of Huthersfield. Hownigg, Cumb. in Westward parish. Howsham, Linc. near Glandford Bridge. Howsham, Yorkf. E. Riding, on the Derwent, NW. of Malton. Howtel, Northumb. near Woller.

HOWTH, or HOATH HEAD, a promontory, forming the NE. boundary of the Bay of Dublin. It is a peninsula, the shores of which are rocky and precipitous. It was formerly covered with oaks, and was a seat of the Druids; one of their altars still remains, in a sequestered valley, on the E. side of the hill. The village of Howth is about 7 miles NE. from the metropolis. On the top of the hill there is a light-house; and a few harbours, on it's shores, are resorted to by small craft.

Howthorp, Linc. SE. of Boothby Pannel. Howton, Dorset. NE. of Middleton. Howton, Heref. near Wormbridge, on the Wye, or a branch of it. Howtongill Chapel, Yorkf. W. Riding, NE. of Settle. Howton in the More, Linc. NW. of Birkbrook. Hoxham, Devonshire, near Poltimore. Hoxon, Suffolk, on the river Waveney, N. of Eye. Here Edmund, king of the East Angles, was bound to a tree; and shot to death with arrows by the pagan Danes, because he would not renounce the Christian religion. A monastery was afterwards erected here to his memory.

HOXTER, a small town in Westphalia, belonging to the Abbey of Corvey, from which it is distant 3 miles NW.

Hoxton, or Hogston, Midd. a populous hamlet in Shoreditch parish, near Moorfields.

HOY, one of the Orkney Islands, situated between the Island of Pomona and the N. coast of Caithnessshire. It is about 11 miles long, and more than 3 broad. On this island, besides the great conic hill of Hoyhead, which is a sea mark, there is a stupendous rock, called the Beary, where a bird, here named the layer, supposed to be a species of the penguin, is found. It is about the size of a small duck, remarkably fat, and esteemed a great delicacy. These birds burrow in the rabbit holes. The person employed in taking the young is usually let down by a rope from the top of the precipice. In this island too, in a gloomy valley, is an entire stone, 36 feet long, and 18 broad, called the Dwarfic Stone. It is hollow within, having the form of a bed and pillow cut in the stone: it is supposed to have been once the habitation of a hermit. Lat. 58. 56. N. lon. 3. 20. W.

HOYA, a town, and sandy, heathy country of Westphalia, (yet with some good meadows, pastures, and arable land,) subject to Hanover, since 1705, except a small part, which belongs to Hesse Cassel. It is about 32 miles long and 29 broad, and contains 17 small towns, besides the capital (which is situated on the Weser, 24 miles SSE. of Bremen) and 54 parishes.

HOYER, a town of Sleswick, celebrated for it's oyster fishery. It is situated on the coast of the North Sea, 4 miles W. of Tundern.

Hoyland, High, Yorkf. W. Riding, in Wentworth parish. Hoyland, Sawain, Yorkf. NW. of Barnetsey.

HRADISCH, a town, capital of a circle of Moravia, celebrated for it's excellent wines and fruits. It is situated on the river Moraw, 30 miles SSE. of Olmutz.

HUA, or KAHUA, a large town, the capital of Cochin China, with a handsome palace, where the king commonly resides. It is seated in a beautiful plain, and divided into two parts by a large river. The inhabitants blacken their teeth, thinking it a shame to have them white, like dogs, and they wear their nails very long. There are a few Christians here. Lat. 17. 40. N. lon. 105. 3. E.

HUAHEINE, one of the Society Islands, in the S. Pacific Ocean, about 30 leagues from Otaheite, and 8 in compass, with a commodious, but small, harbour, on the W. coast, called Owharra, affording good anchorage, in 18 fathoms water, and sheltered from all winds. It is separated by a deep gulf into two peninsulas, united by an isthmus, which is overflowed by the sea in high tides. It's surface is hilly and uneven. Lat. 16. 44. S. lon. 151. 1. W.

Hubberham, Yorks. W. Riding, NE. of Settle.

Hubberston*, in Pembrokeshire, situated on a creek of Milford Haven. It is the station of the packet to Waterford, in Ireland.

Hubberstow, Devonl. on the coast, near the mouth of the river Taw, where Hubba, the Dane, was cut off by the West Saxons.

HUBERT, St. a town of Luxemburg.

Huckam, Devonshire, SE. of Newton Bushel. Huket, or Huckle, Bucks, near Ailesbury. Hucking, Kent, in Hollingbourn parish. Hucklestot, 4 miles E. of Gloucester. Hucklestot, Leicestersl. SE. of Ashby de la Zouch. Hunklow, Great and Little, Derb. in the High Peak. Hucknal, N. of Nottingham. Huckney, or Hall Hucknal, Derbysl. near Mansfield, in Nottinghamsl. Huckflow Forest, Shropsl. about Stiperston's Hill.

HUDDERSFIELD*, a town in the W. Riding of Yorkshire, which has risen to consequence within this century. It is a sort of mart for narrow cloths, fine and coarse, fine broad cloths, serges, kerseymeres, &c. and is situated on the Calder, amid barren moors, 25 miles NE. of Manchester, 42 SW. of York, and 189 NNW. of London. It's market is on Tuesday, when the cloth is exposed to sale in a large hall, and merchants and wool-staplers attend from a considerable distance.

Huddington, Worcs. SE. of Droitwich. Huddleskerw, Cumb. between Penrith and Kirkhaugh. Huddleston, Yorksl. W. Riding, near Shirbyrn, is famous for a quarry of stone, reckoned the finest in England. When first dug out, it is soft, but hardens by lying in the air. King Henry VII.'s chapel, at Westminster, was mostly built of the stone fetched from hence. Hude, a river in Durham, which runs into the Tees at Middleton, 7 miles above Bernard Castle. Hudbay, Lanc. near Haslengden. Hudnal, Herts, in Elesborough parish.

HUDSON, a town of New York, now a peopled, industrious, flourishing, trading spot, on which are erected upwards of 200 dwelling houses, bordering spacious streets, and peopled by more than 1800 souls; on which several public buildings, convenient stores, commodious wharfs, and suitable out-houses are built; on which there are two covered rope-walks, spermaceti works, one of the best distilleries in America, and on which mechanics of every kind are collected; yet, in the autumn of 1783, was nothing better than a mere farm, where the solitary husbandman passed some time twice in a season. No place in America, except Baltimore, in Maryland, presents a more obvious instance of commercial enterprise and progressive increase, than this town, which is surrounded by an extensive back country. Hudson is seated on the E. side of the river of that name, 30 miles S. of Albany, and 130 N. of New York.

HUDSON'S BAY, a large bay of North America, lying between 51 and 67 deg. of N. latitude, and discovered, in 1610, by Captain Henry Hudson. This intrepid mariner, in searching after a NW. passage to the S. Sea, discovered three straits, through which he hoped to find out a new way to Asia by America. He had made two voyages before on the same adventure; the first in 1607, and the second in 1608. In his third and last, in 1610, he entered the straits that lead into this new Mediterranean, the bay known by his name; and coasted a great part of it. His ardour for the discovery not being abated by the difficulties he struggled with in this empire of winter, and world of frost and snow, he staid here till the ensuing spring, and prepared, in the beginning of 1611, to pursue his discoveries; but his crew, who suffered equal hardships, without the same spirit to support them, mutinied, seized upon him, and seven of those who were most faithful to him, and committed them to the icy seas in an open boat. Hudson and his companions were never more heard of; but the ship, and the rest of the men, returned home. Other attempts toward a discovery were also made in 1612 and 1667. In 1746, a Captain Ellis wintered as far north as 57 degrees and a half; and a Captain Christopher attempted farther discoveries in 1761. But besides these, and the late voyages, which satisfy us that we must not look for a passage on this side of the latitude 67 degrees north, we are indebted to the Hudson's Bay Company for a journey by land, which throws much additional light on this matter, by affording what may be called demonstration, how much farther north, at least in some parts of their voyage, ships must go, before they can pass from one side of America to the other. The northern Indians, who come down to the company's factories to trade, had brought to the knowledge of our people a river, which, on account of much copper being found near it, had obtained the name of Copper Mine River. The company being desirous of examining into this matter with precision, directed a young gentleman in their service, of the name of Hearne, to proceed over land, under the convoy of those Indians, for that river; which he had orders to survey, if possible, quite down to its exit into the sea, to make observations for fixing the latitudes and longitudes, and to bring home maps and drawings, both of it and the countries through which he should pass. Accordingly, Mr. Hearne, set out from Prince of Wales Fort, on Churchill River, on the 7th of December, 1770, and, on the 13th of June following, reached the Copper Mine River, but found it all the way, even to its exit into the sea, encumbered with shoals and falls. The tide being then out, seemed, by the edges of the ice, to rise about 12 or 14 feet, entering it over a dry flat of the shore. This rise, on account of the falls, will carry the tide but a little way within the river's mouth, so that the water in it had not the least brackish taste. He was, nevertheless, sure of the place it emptied itself into being the sea, or a branch of it, by the quantity of whale and seal skins which the Ekimaux had at their tents; and also by the number of seals which he saw upon the ice. The sea, at the river's mouth, was full of islands and shoals, as far as he could see by the assistance of a pocket telescope; and the ice was not yet broken up, but thawed away only for about three quarters of a mile from the shore, and for a little way round the islands and shoals which lay off the river's mouth. But he had the most extensive view of the sea when he was about 8 miles up the river; from which station, the extreme parts of it bore NW. by W. and NE. It appears from the map, which Mr. Hearne constructed of this singular journey, that the mouth of the Copper Mine River lies in lat. 72. N. and lon. 25. W. from Churchill River; that is about 119 W. of Greenwich. Mr. Hearne's journey back, from the Copper Mine River to Churchill River, lasted till June 30th, 1772; so that he was absent almost a year and seven months. The country lying round Hudson's Bay on the W. and SW. is called New N. and New S. Wales. The extensive peninsula to the E. of it is called Labrador, or New Britain. The entrance of the Bay from the ocean, after leaving Cape Farewell and Davis' Straits, is between Resolution Isles on the N. and Button's Isles on the S forming the eastern extremity of the straits, distinguished by the name of its first discoverer. The vast countries that surround Hudson's Bay, abound with animals, whose skins and furs are far superior in quality to those found in less northerly regions. In 1670, a charter was granted to a company, which does not consist of above ten persons, for the exclusive trade to this bay, and for planting the country; and they have acted under it ever since, with great benefit to themselves, but little comparative advantage to the kingdom at large. Of late years, however, the fur trade, from the inland parts, has been carried on to a much greater extent than it was before. This has been chiefly occasioned by the interference of the Canada traders, who had effectually supplanted the company on the sea-shore, supplying the natives with every convenience for war and domestic uses. This induced the company, in 1773, to begin their inland voyages, and now the Canadians, from Canada, and the Europeans, from Hudson's Bay, frequently meet together. The servants of the company, however, imported principally from the Orkney Isles, having ingratiated themselves into the confidence of the natives, from their prudent, proper behaviour, and incorruptible honesty, have evidently the advantage of trade on their side. They consequently export a greater quantity of furs (in proportion to the goods imported), and these in better preservation and more valuable. They employ 4 ships, and about 130 seamen, and have several forts; namely, Prince of Wales' Fort, Churchill River; York Fort, Nelson River; New Severn; and Albany; which are all seated on the WSW. side of the Bay.

HUDSON'S RIVER, one of the finest rivers, in N. America, rising in a mountainous country, in the NE. part of the state of New York, about half way between the Lakes Ontario and Champlain. It waters Albany and Hudson, and proceeds, in a southerly direction, almost its whole course, to the Atlantic Ocean, which it enters at York Bay, 10 miles S. of New York, after a course of 250 miles. The tide flows a few miles above Albany, which is 160 miles from New York. It is navigable for sloops of 70 or 80 tons to Albany, and for ships to Hudson.

Hudswell, Yorkshire, S. of Richmond Moor.

Moor. Huelsfield, Gloucestershire, in Lydney parish.

HUEN, a fertile island of the Baltic, in the Sound, subject to Sweden since the treaty of Roschild, in 1658. It has only one village, containing about 50 houses. This island was granted, by Frederick II. king of Denmark, to Tycho Brahe, the celebrated astronomer, with a castle called Uranienburg, erected for the purpose of making observations, in which he resided upwards of 20 years. It is about 6 miles in circumference, and lies 14 miles N. by E. of Copenhagen.

HUESCA, an ancient and considerable town of Arragon, with an university. It is situated on the Isuela, 27 miles NNE. of Saragossa.

HULL, or KINGSTON UPON HULL, a large, closely-built, well-paved, and exceedingly populous town, in the E. Riding of Yorkshire, seated on a river called the Hull, which rises not far from Driffield, and here enters the river Humber. It's commerce has been constantly increasing so much of late years, that it is now probably become the fourth port in the kingdom. It's situation is extremely advantageous; for, besides it's communication with the Yorkshire rivers and canals, it has access also, by the Humber to the Trent, and all it's branches and communications. Hence it has the import and export trade of many of the northern and midland counties. By the late inland navigations, it has also a communication with the rivers Mersey, Dee, Ribble, Severn, Thames, Avon, &c. which navigation, including it's windings, extends above 500 miles in the counties of Lincoln, Nottingham, York, Lancaster, Westmorland, Chester, Stafford, Warwick, Leicester, Oxford, Worcester, &c. The foreign trade is chiefly to the Baltic; but it has also regular traffic with the southern parts of Europe, and with America. More ships are sent hence to Greenland than from any other port, that of London excepted. The coasting trade, also, for coal, corn, wool, manufactured goods, &c. is very extensive. The harbour is chiefly artificial, consisting of a dock, the largest in the kingdom (finished in 1778); with which the river communicates, and in which 800 ships may ride safely and conveniently. Among the public buildings, are the Trinity House, for the relief of seamen and their widows; an exchange, and a town hall. The grand stone bridge, over the river, to Holderness, was rebuilt in 1787, and consists of 14 arches. It is 36 miles SE. of York; and 173 N. of London. Markets on Tuesday and Saturday.

Hullased, Gloucesters. in Coates parish. Hullaxington, Wilts, between Castlecomb and Malmesbury. Hullbridge, Essex, on the Crouch, W. of Wallfleet. Hullend, Herts, N. of Standon. Hullingwick, Herefordshire, SW. of Bromyard. Hulm, or Holm's Chapel, Cheshire, in Sandbach parish, near Warrington. Hulme Church, and Hulme Wakefield, Chef. between Congleton and Northwich.

HULST, a small, but ancient, and strongly-fortified town, of Dutch Flanders, with 12 dependent villages. It is situated among marshes, on a canal which communicates with the Scheldt, 16 miles NNE. of Ghent.

HUMBER, a river formed by the junction of the Trent, Ouse, Derwent, and several other streams. It divides Yorkshire from Lincolnshire, and falls into the German Ocean between Spurn Head and Saltfleet.

HUNGARY, a kingdom of Europe, bounded on the W. by Moravia and the circle of Austria; on the N. and NE. by Poland; on the E. by Walachia, Transylvania, and part of Moldavia; and on the S. by Servia and the river Drave, which separates it from Sclavonia and Croatia. It is divided into Upper and Lower Hungary; and to these may be added the Bannat of Temeswar, incorporated into the kingdom of Hungary, in 1778. Hungary formerly included Transylvania, Sclavonia, Dalmatia, Servia, Walachia, and other countries. The principal rivers are the Danube, Save, Drave, Theisse, Temes, Leitha, Raab, Waag, Gran, and Maros. The air in the southern parts is unhealthy, occasioned by the lakes and bogs, inasmuch that a sort of plague visits them every three or four years, on which account it is called the grave of the Germans. It abounds in all the necessaries of life, and the wine, especially that called Tokay, is excellent. There are mines of gold, silver, copper, and iron; and they have such plenty of game, that hunting is allowed to all. Almost all the towns of Hungary have two names, the one German, and the other Hungarian; and the language is a dialect of the Sclavonian. The government is hereditary in the house of Austria, whether male or female; and the established religion is Popery, though there are a great number of Protestants. No country in the world is better supplied with minerals and baths; and those of Buda, when the Turks had it in possession, were reckoned the finest in Europe. Buda is the capital town of Lower Hungary, and Presburg of the Upper.

HUNTINGDONSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the W. and N. by Northamptonshire, on the NE. and E. by Cambridgeshire, and on the S. by a part of Cambridgeshire and Bedfordshire. It extends 22 miles from N. to S. and about 18 from E. to W. The principal rivers are the Ouse and Nen. It is divided into 4 hundreds, which contain 5 market towns, 78 parishes, 279 villages, about 3220 houses, and upwards of 49,000 inhabitants. The borders of the Ouse, which flows across the SE. part, consist of fertile and very beautiful meadows. The middle and western parts are finely varied in their surface, fertile in corn, and sprinkled with woods. The whole upland part was, in ancient times, a forest, peculiarly adapted for hunting, whence the name of the county took its rise. The NE. part consists of fens, which join those of Ely; but they are drained, so as to afford rich pasturage for cattle, and even large crops of corn; and, in the midst of them are shallow pools, abounding with fish. The largest of these is a lake of considerable size, called Whittlesea Mere. The air is good, except in the fenny parts, which are aguish. Its chief commodities are corn, malt, and cheese; and they fatten abundance of cattle.

JACKSON'S BOROUGH, formerly called POUPON, a town of S. Carolina, 22 miles W. of Charleston.

JACKSON, PORT, a large bay on the coast of New South Wales, about 12 miles N. of Cape Banks, thought to be the finest harbour in the world. The capes at it's entrance, which is less than 2 miles across, are high, perpendicular cliffs, and within, it gradually expands into a noble basin, with soundings sufficient for the largest vessels, and space to accommodate, in perfect security, a greater number than ever were assembled at one station. Ships may lie in 5½ fathoms within 50 yards of the shore, and the channel, (the surface of which is as smooth as a fish pond) has mostly 15 fathoms, gradually shoaling farther up. It runs, chiefly in a western direction, about 13 miles into the country, and contains at least a hundred small coves, formed by narrow necks of land, the projections of which afford complete shelter from all winds. Sydney Cove lies on the S. side of the harbour, between 5 and 6 miles from the entrance. There is an abundance of fish in the harbour, most of which are unknown in England, besides oysters, cockles, and other shell-fish.

JAGHIRE OF THE CARNATIC, a tract of land, in the peninsula of Hindoostan, subject to the English East India Company. It extends along the Bay of Bengal, from Madras to Lake Pullicate on the N. to Alemparvé on the S. and to Conjeveram on the W. being 108 miles along the shore, and 47 inland, in the widest part. The term Jaghire means a grant of land from the sovereign to a subject, revokable at pleasure, but generally a life-rent. It contains 2440 square miles, and it's revenue is about 150,000l. per annum.

JAGO, ST. a large river of South America, in Peru. It falls into the S. Sea, about 150 miles NW, of Quito, in lat. 1. 20. N. after having watered a fertile country, abounding in cotton trees, palms, bamboos, &c.

JAGO, ST. one of the largest, most populous, best cultivated, and most fertile of the Cape de Verd Islands, on the coast of Africa. It lies about 6 leagues westward of the Island of Mayo, and is about 60 miles in circumference. The people, in general, are black, or, at best, of a mixed colour, except a few of the better rank. Cotton is produced in such abundance, in this island, that, besides the large quantities sent to the Brasils, and sold by the Portuguese to the other European nations, the natives are, in general, clothed with this manufacture. Here are vines, of which they make a wine, that is not contemptible; but as they are supplied with better by the European shipping, it has fallen into disrepute. The chief fruits of the island, besides a profusion of plantains, are citrons, lemons, oranges, musk, and water-melons; limes, bananas, guavas, pomegranates, pumpions, quinces, custard apples, papas, tamarinds, pine apples, cocoa-nuts, tar, apples, and sugar canes. The animals are cows, horses, asses, mules, deer, goats, hogs, civet cats, and black-faced, well-proportioned monkeys, with long tails. Of the feathered kind, there are cocks, hens, ducks, Guinea hens, both tame and wild, parroquets, parrots, pigeons, turtle doves, crab catchers, curlews, and a great variety of others, valuable only for their plumage. They have also some cedar trees, and plenty of Indian corn. It is, in general, very high land; but were it not for the continual rains in the time of the travadoes, which render it unpleasant, and unwholesome to strangers, it would be as delightful an island as any in the world. The chief towns are St.

Jago and Praya. Lat. 14. 54. N. lon. 23. 30. W.

JAGO, ST. a sea-port town, capital of the Island of St. Jago, and of all the Cape de Verd Islands; the residence of the governor, and see of a bishop. It consists of about 300 houses, a church, and a convent, all built of rough stone, and greatly superior, in respect of architecture and circumstances of convenience, to those of the other islands. It stands dispersed upon the declivity of 2 hills, between which there is a deep valley, about 200 yards wide, towards the sea, but gradually decreasing in breadth as it retires from the shore, in a triangular form, the coast making the base. In this valley, close by the sea, there is a kind of street, that runs parallel with the sea, across the valley, consisting of houses on both sides, that are watered by a rivulet which falls into a fine, sandy bay, where the sea is constantly smooth and even as glass. This forms a convenient watering-place for ships, though the entrance be, in a manner, blocked up (except to good pilots) by a chain of rocks. Near the landing place stands a small fort, almost level with the sea, in which is kept a constant guard, regularly relieved. On the very summit of the hill, behind the town, is another fort, well garrisoned, and mounted with heavy cannon. Besides the ships of other nations, which accidentally touch here, there are two Portuguese vessels, which take it yearly in their way to Brasil. These vend among the inhabitants all kinds of European commodities, and take in exchange the principal manufacture of the island, striped cotton, which they sell again to good advantage in the Brasils. Besides this, one ship comes directly from Portugal to take in a cargo of sugar, in exchange for the manufactures of Europe.

JAGO, ST. a considerable town of S. America, capital of Chili, with a good harbour, and a royal audience. It is seated in a beautiful and fertile plain, on the river Mapocho, which runs across it from E. to W. Here are several canals, and a dyke, by means of which they water the gardens and cool the streets. It is subject to earthquakes. Lat. 34. 10. S. lon. 71. 5. W.

JAGO, ST. the most ancient town of Cuba, on the S. coast, with a noble and commodious harbour. It is seated at the bottom of a bay, on a river of the same name. Lat. 20. 15. N. lon. 76. 40. W.

JAGO, ST. a town of Popayan; also a town of New Mexico, and province of New Leon.

JAGO DE LA VEGA, ST. or SPANISH TOWN, a town of the Island of Jamaica, where the assembly and the grand courts are held. It is seated in a pleasant valley, on the Rio Corbe, and was once a populous place, but is now reduced to a small compass. Being an inland place, it's trade is small, but several wealthy people reside here, living in a gay manner. It is seated near the SE. part of the island, about 7 miles NW. of Port Passage, on the Bay of Port Royal. Lat. 18. 6. N. lon. 76. 49. W.

JAGODNA, a town of Servia, seated on the river Moraw, 70 miles SE. of Belgrade.

JAICZA, a town of Bosnia, in Turkey.

JAMAGOROD, a town in the government of Petersburg, seated on the river Jama, 12 miles NE. of Narva.

JAMAICA, an island of the W. Indies, discovered by Christopher Columbus, in 1494, 37 miles S. of Cuba, and 50 W. of St. Domingo. It is about 120 miles in length, and 42 where broadest. It is of an oval figure, and grows narrower from the middle, till it terminates in two points at the extremities of the island. It contains between 4 and 5,000,000 of acres, and is divided by a ridge of hills, which runs nearly from E. to W. from sea to sea. Here abundance of fine rivers take their rise, and flow from both sides in gentle streams, refreshing the valleys as they glide along, and furnishing the inhabitants with sweet and cool water. They are well stored with excellent fish of various kinds, not known in Europe; and they have eels and crawfish in great plenty, not unlike ours. None of these rivers are navigable, even for barges; but some of them are so large, that the sugars are carried upon them in canoes from the remote plantations to the sea-side; others of them run under ground for a considerable space, particularly the Rio Corbe and the Rio Pedra. The mountains, and indeed the greatest part of the islands, are covered with woods, which never lose their verdure, but look green at all times of the year; for here is a perennial spring. There are a thousand different kinds of trees adorning the brow of every hill, irregularly mixing their different branches, appearing in gay confusion, and forming groves and cool retreats. Among these are the lignum vitæ, the cedar, and the mahogany trees. In the valleys are sugar-canes, and such a variety of fruit-trees, as to make the country look like a paradise. But to balance these advantages, there are dreadful alligators in the rivers; guanoes and gallinules in the fens and marshes; and snakes, and noxious animals, in the mountains. The days and nights are almost of an equal length all the year round. There are two springs, or seasons, for planting grain, and the year is distinguished into two seasons, the wet and the dry. July, August, and September are called the hurricane months, because then these dreadful tempests are most frequent, and there is lightning almost every night. Not above one-half of the island is cultivated, all the plantations being by the sea-side. Here and there are savannas, or large plains, where the original natives used to plant their Indian corn, and which the Spaniards afterwards made use of for breeding their cattle; but these are now quite bare and barren. The houses are generally built low, being only one story, on account of the hurricanes and earthquakes; and the negroes live in huts made of reeds, which hold only two or three persons. The common drink is Madeira wine, or rum punch. The common bread, or that which serves for it, is plantains, yams, and cassava-roots. The yams are like potatoes, only coarser, and of a much larger size. But in 1793, a great number of the bread-fruit trees were brought here from the Island of Otaheite, by Captain Bligh, in the Providence frigate. The cinnamon-tree thrives here extremely well; the first of these trees seen in that part of the world, were obtained out of a French ship captured by Admiral Rodney; this yielded seeds in abundance, and many plants have been raised from them, which prosper exceedingly in the cultivated parts of the island. Hogs are plentiful, and their mutton and lamb pretty good; but the servants generally feed upon Irish salt-beef, and the negroes have herrings and salt fish. The current coin is all Spanish money. The general produce of this island is sugar, rum, ginger, cotton, indigo, pimento, chocolate, several kinds of woods and medicinal drugs. They have some tobacco, which is but indifferent, and used only by the negroes. They have no sorts of European grain; but they have Indian corn, Guinea corn, and pease of various kinds, but none like ours; with variety of roots. Fruits are in great plenty, such as Seville and China oranges oranges, common and sweet lemons, shadocks, citrons, pomegranates, marmes, fourfops, papas, pine apples, star apples, prickly pears, alicada pears, melons, pom-pions, guavas, and many other sorts. The common distempers are, fevers, fluxes, and the dry gripes. Jamaica is divided into 3 counties, Middlesex, Surry, and Cornwall, which contain 6 towns and 27 villages. The legislature consists of a governor, appointed by the king; a council; and house of assembly. In 1787, the number of negroes amounted to about 250,000, the whites to 30,000, the freed negroes and people of colour to 10,000, and the Maroons (who have been since transported to Nova Scotia) to 1400. In the same year, the exports amounted, in the whole, to the sum of 2,136,442l. 17s. 3d. sterling, at the current London prices, and the imports to the sum of 1,496,232l. 5s. 4d. The principal town is Kingston; but St. Jago de la Vega, or Spanish Town, is the seat of government. In 1655, Jamaica was taken from the Spaniards by the English, under Penn and Venables.

JAPAN ISLANDS, a large country of Asia, situated to the eastward of China, Corea, and Tartary. It consists of 3 large islands, the names of which are Nippon, or Hiphon, Ximo, and Xikoko, and several smaller ones. The whole empire is divided into 7 principal countries, which are subdivided into 70 provinces. It is the richest country in the world for gold, and the air and water are very good. It produces a great deal of rice, millet, wheat, and barley. Cedars are common, and so large, that they are proper for the masts of ships, and columns for temples. Both their porcelain and Japan are much better than those articles are in China; they have also silk, skins, and red pearls, which are not in less esteem than the white. Their horses, though extremely small, are very beautiful, and highly valued; and they have an art of tempering steel beyond any other nation in the world. They have tea, of all sorts, much finer and better cured than that of China. The inhabitants are very ingenious, and their manners are, in many respects diametrically opposite to those of the Europeans. Our common drinks are cold, and theirs are all hot;

hot; the Europeans uncover the head out of respect, and they the feet; we are fond of white teeth, and they of black; we get on horseback on the left side, and they on the right; and they have a language so peculiar, that it is understood by no other nation. The sciences are highly esteemed among them, and they have several schools at different places. Those they study most are arithmetic, rhetoric, poetry, history, and astronomy. Some of their schools at Meaco have each 3 or 4000 scholars. They treat the women with great severity, and punish adultery with death; yet a man may take as many wives as he pleases. The Japanese formerly carried on a trade with the neighbouring countries; but now all communication with others is forbidden, except the Chinese, Coreans, the country of Jedso, and with the Dutch. Formerly their emperors were also sovereign pontiffs, and in the minority of one of them, when they had civil wars, one of the competitors of the crown assumed the ecclesiastical government, retaining the ancient title of Dairo, or Emperor; while the other, who ruled in civil affairs, was called Cubo; and things have remained on the same footing to this day. The Dairo is, at present, the nominal emperor, and confers the dignity upon the other, as if he were his vassal. He resides at Meaco, and has no lands; but he has a right of selling titles and dignities; and the idolatrous priests make great contributions. He wears a black habit, and a cap upon his head. His feet must never touch the ground, nor must he ever be exposed to the rays of the sun. He never cuts his hair, nor his beard, nor his nails; and all his victuals must be dressed in new vessels. When he goes abroad, he is carried by 14 men, in a litter, surrounded with curtains, so that he may see, and not be seen. He has generally 12 wives, who have each a palace, with singing and dancing women for his diversion. He has also an unlimited number of concubines. His palace is adorned with 365 idols. The Cubo, however, is the real emperor, and bears an absolute dominion over all civil and military affairs throughout the empire. The Dairo, therefore may be considered as only the high priest, while the Cubo is now the real monarch of Japan. The religion of the whole country is Paganism; but there are two different sects; one of which is subjected to the most painful severities; the other abandons itself to the most voluptuous enjoyments. There were once a great number of Christians, proselytes to the Jesuit missionaries, in different parts of the empire; but, in 1622, they underwent great persecutions, insomuch that they were, at length, all rooted out. The cause of this was the opposition of the priests; the haughty behaviour of the Portuguese; they not allowing several wives; and the persuasions of the Dutch, who told them, that their emperor would become a slave to the Pope, and to the king of Spain. The emperor of Japan is monarch paramount, and all the petty kings are his vassals. His army generally consists of 100,000 foot, and 20,000 horse, exclusive of those maintained by his vassals. His ordinary revenue is immense. The palace of the emperor is at Jeddo, in the Island of Nippon, and it is the capital of the whole. The only Europeans that trade with Japan are the Dutch; and whenever their ships arrive, they take away their guns, sails, and helms, and carry them on shore, till they are ready to return back. In the absence of the ships, the factors are shut up in a small peninsula, and are not suffered so much as to have a lighted candle in their houses in the night time. The merchandise which the Dutch carry to Japan are spices, sugar, silks, linen, and woollen cloths, elephants' teeth, haberdashery wares, raw hides, drugs, and glasses of all sorts; for which they receive gold, silver, copper, iron, and steel; porcelain, japanned and lacerated wares, furs, tea, precious stones, ambergris, and medicinal herbs. The Japanese have neither tables, beds, and chairs, but they sit and lie on carpets and mats, in the manner of the Turks.

JAPARA, a town of Java, seated on a river of the same name, on the N. coast, with a spacious harbour. It was the capital of a considerable kingdom, till the Dutch made themselves masters of it; and now they have a colony here, and a considerable trade. It is 200 miles E. of Batavia. Lat. 6. 35. S. lon. 111. 5. E.

JATS, THE, once a powerful tribe in Hindoostan to whom all that now remains is the small territory of Bhurtpour, 45 miles W. of Agra.

JAUER, a town of Silesia, capital of a mountainous principality, of the same name, containing 12 towns, and some large and populous, manufacturing villages. It is N. of Bohemia, and W. of the principalities of Lignitz and Schweidnitz. The earthen ware is much esteemed. The town of Janer is noted for a large square, surrounded by piazzas, and is 12 miles S. of Lignitz, and 16 NW. of Schweidnitz.

JAVA, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, generally known by the name of Great Java, to distinguish it from Bali, by some named the Lesser Java; and is upwards of 600 miles in length, and from 60 to 80 in breadth. The N. coast has a great many commodious creeks, bays, harbours, and towns, with many little islands near the shore. In former times, it had as many petty kings as there were large towns; but now it has two kingdoms only; one of which is under the jurisdiction of the king of Mataram, and the other under the king of Bantam. The inhabitants are of a brown complexion, have faces rather flat, short, coal-black hair, large eye-brows, and large cheeks, with small eyes. The men are very robust and strong limbed; but the women are small. The men wear a piece of calico wrapt two or three times round their middle; and the women wear them from their arm-pits down to their knees; but all other parts are bare. Those living near the sea side are generally Mahometans; but within land they are Gentoos, abstaining from flesh of all kinds. It is a fertile island, producing sugar and the various tropical fruits; and it has very high mountains. It has likewise impassable forests and wildernesses; but the N. between Batavia and Bantam, is a very populous country, full of rice-fields, and various sorts of wild and tame animals. Here also is plenty of salt, pepper, cassia, wood useful for building, gum benzoin, &c. beside flowering trees and shrubs, and most sorts of fruits proper to the climate. They have also hogs, bees, and sheep, with other tame creatures; and likewise fowl, both wild and tame, in great abundance, among which are beautiful parrots, peacocks of an extraordinary size, Bantam fowls, &c. In the woods are large tigers, rhinoceroses, and several other animals unknown in Europe; and in the rivers are crocodiles. The air is as temperate and healthy as any part of the East-Indies. The rains, which begin in November, lay the low grounds under water, kill the insects, and continue till the return of May. The coasts of the island are mostly under the dominion of the Dutch. Beside the native Javanese, here are Chinese, Malaysians, Amboynese, Topasses, Bugasses, Timoreans, and many other people, brought from distant countries by the Dutch. Java lies to the SE. of the Island of Sumatra, from which it is only separated by the Straits of Sunda. Lat. 5. 45. to 7. 50. S. lon. 104. 20. to 114. 15. E.

ICE, VALLEY OF. See GLACIERS.

ICELAND, a large island to the N. of Europe, about 600 miles in length, and 300 in breadth. For two months together the sun never sets; and in the winter it never rises for the same space, at least not entirely. The middle of this island is mountainous, stony, and barren; but in some places there are excellent pastures, and the grass has a fine smell. The ice, which gets loose from the more northern country in May, brings with it a large quantity of wood, and several animals, such as foxes, wolves, and bears. Mount Hecla is the most noted mountain, and is a volcano, which sometimes throws out sulphureous torrents. Their houses are scattered about at a distance from each other, and many of them are deep in the ground, but they are mostly miserable huts, covered with skins. Many of the natives profess Christianity; but those that live at a distance are Pagans. Some of them are clothed with skins of beasts. The exports are dried fish, salted mutton, beef, butter, train oil, tallow, coarse and fine jackets of wadmal, woollen stockings and gloves, red wool, sheep skins, sea-horses' teeth, fox-tails of several colours, feathers, and quills. The imports are iron, horses-shoes, timber, meal, wine, brandy, tobacco, coarse linen, and domestic utensils. The number of inhabitants is about 50,000. Their language is the old Runic, or Gothic, the vernacular tongue of the Swedes, Danes, and Norwegians, before it branched into the several dialects since spoken by the natives of these three kingdoms. Lat. 63. 15. to 67. 15. N. lon. 16. to 25. W.

JED, a river of Roxburghshire, which runs into the Teviot, about 2 miles N. of Jedburgh. On the banks of this river are several large caverns, which were the strong holds, or hiding places, of the ancient border warriors.

JEDBURGH, a town of Roxburghshire, situated almost in the centre of the county, on the banks of the Jed, and near it's confluence with the Teviot, 34 miles SE. of Edinburgh. It contains near 3000 inhabitants, (including the environs, which belong to the parish) and is the seat of the law courts for the county.

JEDDO, or YEDDO, the second capital of Japan, in the Island of Nippon, where the daïro, or nominal emperor, resides. The houses are built with earth, and boarded on the outside, to prevent the rain from destroying the walls. In every street is an iron gate, which is shut up in the night, and a kind of custom house or magazine, to put merchandize in. It is 9 miles in length and 6 in breadth, and contains 1,000,000 inhabitants. A fire happened in 1658, which, in the space of 48 hours, burnt down 100,000 houses, and in which a great number of the inhabitants perished. The emperor's palace was reduced to ashes; but the whole is rebuilt. The royal palace is in the middle of the town, and is defended by walls, ditches, towers, and bastions. Where the emperor resides, are three towers, nine stories high, each covered with plates of gold; and the hall of audience is supported by pillars of massy gold. Near the palace are several others, where the relations of the emperor live. The empress has a palace of her own, and there are 20 small ones for the concubines. Besides, all the vassal kings have each a palace in the city, with a handsome garden, and stables for 2000 horses. The generality of the houses are nothing but a ground floor, and the rooms are parted by folding screens: so that they can make the rooms larger or smaller at pleasure. Jeddo is well-fortified, and is seated in a plain, at the bottom of an extensive gulf or bay; and the river, which crosses it, is divided into several canals. Lat. 35. 46. N. lon. 139. 30. E.

JEHUD, or Joud, mountains in the NW. part of Hindoostan Proper, extending from Attock, eastward to Bember. They are part of the territory of the mountaineers, called Gickers, Gekers, or Ka-kaers.

JERSEY, an island in the English Channel, about 18 miles from the coast of the dept. of the Channel, and 84 S. of Portland in Dorsetshire, subject to the English. It is about 12 miles long and 6 broad, and is difficult of access, on account of the rocks and sands. It contains 12 parishes: the principal towns are St. Helier, in the S. part of the island, and St. Aubin. It lies extremely well for trade. It is well watered with rivulets, and is well stocked with fruit-trees. They have a noted manufacture for woollen stockings and caps. The civil government is intrusted to a bailiff liff and 12 jurats, under a governor appointed by the crown. Round towers have been erected on all the accessible parts of the coast, since the year 1781, when a body of French, under the Baron de Rullecourt, effected a landing, but were all either killed, wounded, or taken prisoners. Lat. 49. 11. N. lon. 2. 10. W.

JERSEY, NEW, one of the United States of N. America, bounded on the E. by Hudson's River and the Atlantic Ocean; on the S. by the Atlantic, and the Bay of Delaware; on the W. by Pennsylvania and the state of Delaware, from both which it is separated by the river of that name; and on the N. by a line drawn from the mouth of Mahakkamak River, in lat. 41. 24. to a point in Hudson's River, in lat. 41. It is about 161 miles long and 52 broad. It is divided into 13 counties. It's produce is much the same as that of the neighbouring states. The principal towns are Burlington, Amboy, Brunswick, and Trenton.

Jervistown, in Clare, Munster. Jergin's Town, in Kildare, Leinster, near Naas, 16 miles from Dublin.

JERUSALEM, an ancient and celebrated city of Asia, formerly capital of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, after David had conquered the Jebusites. It was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, in the eleventh year of the reign of Zedekiah, and the Jews were led captive to Babylon. It was afterwards taken by the Romans, and ruined, together with the temple, 70 years after the birth of Christ, being one of the most remarkable sieges in history. The emperor Adrian built a new city, near the ruins of ancient Jerusalem. It was taken by the Persians in 614, and by the Saracens in 636. In 1099 it was retaken by the Crusaders, who founded a new kingdom, which lasted near 88 years, under 5 Latin Kings, and 8 patriarchs in the church. Saladin, king of Egypt and Syria, obtained possession of it in 1187. The Turks drove away the Saracens in 1217, have kept possession of it ever since, and call it HELEODS, that is, the Holy City. It is now inhabited by Turks, Arabs, Jews, and Christians. It stands on a high rock, with steep ascents upon every side, except to the N. It is almost surrounded with valleys encompassed with mountains, so that it seems to stand in the middle of an amphitheatre. It is about 3 miles in circumference, and includes Mount Calvary, which was formerly without the walls. On this hill is erected a large structure, with a round nave, which has no light but what comes through the top, like the Pantheon at Rome. This is called the Church of the Holy Sepulchre; the chapel of which is cut out of the rock, and lamps are kept constantly burning in it. The Christian pilgrims flock here from various parts, and the inhabitants accommodate them with lodgings and provisions, which is their chief business, and a bashaw, with a guard of janizaries, always resides here, to protect them from the insults of the Arabs. Jerusalem is 112 miles SSW. of Damascus, and 45 from the Mediterranean Sea. Lat. 31. 55. N. lon. 35. 25. E.

JESI, a town of Ancona, Italy, seated on a mountain near the river Jesi, 16 miles WSW. of Ancona.

JESO. See KURILES.

JESSELMERE. See JASSELMERE.

JESSO, JEDSO, or YEDSO, a large island of Asia, N. of the Island of Nippon, governed by a tributary prince, dependent on the empire of Japan. It is full of woods, and the inhabitants are more rude and savage than the Japanese, living chiefly on fish and game.

Jessop's Well, in Surry, a sulphureous spring, 4 miles from Epsom, similar to that of Harrowgate in Yorkshire.

JESUS ISLAND, in the river St. Lawrence, near the Island of Montreal. It is about 24 miles long, and 6 wide.

JETTING, or HIERTING, a sea-port town of N. Jutland, situated at the mouth of the Warde, with one of the best harbours in that country, 22 miles NW. of Ripen.

JEVER, a town of Westphalia, capital of Jeverland, a small country in the NE. part of E. Friesland, on the W. side of the mouth of the Weser, subject to the prince of Anhalt Zerbst. It is 28 miles NE. of Embden.

Jevington, Suffex, near East Bourne.

JEW, MARKET. See MERAZION.

IF, a small island of France, the most easterly of the three at the entrance of the port of Martelles: it is well fortified, and furnished with a garrison.

Iford, Hants, W. of Christchurch. Ifield, Kent, SE. of Gravestend. Ifield, Suffex, N. of Horsham. Ifield, Suffex, N. of Lewes. Ifley, near Oxford. Iford, Suffex, SW. of Lewes. Iford, Wilts, near Bradford. Ightham, Kent, SW. of Wrotham.

IGIS, a town of the Grisons, with a magnificent cattle, in which is a cabinet of of curiosities, and a handsome library. It is 13 miles SW. of Coire.

IGLAU, a populous town of Moravia, capital of a circle, which contains 21 towns, 294 villages, and about 6433 houses. It has a manufacture of good cloth, and a considerable commerce in corn and hemp. It is about 62 miles SE. of Prague.

IGLESIAS, a town in the S. of Sardinia.

JIDDA, a sea-port of Mecca, in Arabia Felix, with a considerable trade, being a sort of mart between Egypt and India. The circumjacent country affords nothing but Taif almonds for an object of traffic; of these, the English, who are particularly favoured here, carry away about 500,000 weight a year, to India. It is situated in a barren, sandy district, without water, (all their provisions being imported from Egypt) 170 miles S. of Medina.

JIHON, a large river of Asia, which rises in the mountains of Little Thibet, passes through Bucharia and Charafin, and empties itself partly into the Caspian Sea, and partly into the Lake Aral.

JIONPOUR, a small city of Hindoostan Proper, capital of a circle of the same name, in the district of Benares. It is seated on the river Goomty, and was, at one time, the seat of an empire. Chaja Jehan, vizier to Sultan Mahammed Shah, during the minority of his son, Mamood Shah, assumed the title of Sultan Shirki, or King of the East, took possession of Bahar, and fixed his residence at Jionpour, where he built the great musjud, or mausoleum, which is still remaining, for himself and family. The bridge over the Goomty is built of stone, and consists of 16 pointed arches. On the top of the bridge are many little shops on both sides, built of stone. It was built in 1467, upon such sound principles, as to have withstood, for such a length of time, the force of the stream, which, in the time of the rains, is very great. The inundations have been known to rise frequently over the bridge, inasmuch that, in 1774, a whole brigade of the British army (that is, 10,000 men) passed over it in boats. Jionpour is 40 miles NW. of Benares. Lat. 25.45. N. lon. 82.55. E.

ILA. See ISLAY.

Ilam, Staff. NW. of Ashbourn in Derbyshire, and near the eruptions of the rivers Manifold and Hamps, at one mouth, after they have run for some miles under ground.

ILANTS, a town in the country of the Grisons, capital of the Grey League. It

Ilbreurs, Somerset. N. of Ilminster.

ILCHESTER, a town of Somersetshire, consisting of 4 streets, with one church, and other places of worship. It is a town of great antiquity, and once had sixteen churches. The county jail is kept here, but the assizes are held alternately at Bridgewater, Wells, and Taunton. It is seated on the river Ivel, 16 miles S. of Wells, and 123 W. by S. of London. Market on Wednesday.

Ilcomb, Cornwall, E. of Stratton.

ILDEFONSO, ST. a magnificent, royal palace, with fine water-works, gardens, &c. in New Castile, 27 miles N. of Madrid. It was built by Philip V.

ILDEFONSO DE LOS ZAPOTACOS, ST. a town on a mountain in Mexico.

Ilberton, Northumb. S. of Woller. Ilenden, Kent, SW. of Wingham. Ilkirk, Cumb. in the parish of Westward. Ilens, a river in Pembrokehire.

ILESUGAGUEN, a town on a mountain, in the province of Hea, Morocco.

Ilford, Great, a large village of Essex, on the river Roding, which is navigable hence to the Thames. This place, and Little Ilford, adjoining, are hamlets to the town of Barking. It is 7 miles NE. by E. of London.

ILFRACOMBE, a sea-port of Devonshire, has a convenient, safe harbour, formed by a good pier, projecting into the Bristol Channel. The high tides here allow large vessels to enter it's basin. This port employs a number of brigs and sloops, chiefly in carrying ore from Cornwall, coal from Wales, and corn to Bristol. A number of fishing skiffs belong to this place, which, with those of Minehead, fish on a bank off the coast during the summer, and carry a number of soals, turbot, &c. to the Bristol market. It is 49 miles NNW. of Exeter, and 181 W. by S. of London. Market on Saturday.

ILHEOS, a sea-port, capital of the district of Rio dos Ilheos, in Brazil. It is situated at the mouth of a river of the same name. Lat. 15.25. S. lon. 40.25. W.

ILKUCH, a town of Gracow, in Poland, remarkable for it's silver mines mixed with lead. It is 15 miles NW. of Cracow.

ILLE, a town in the dept. of the Eastern Pyrenees, 10 miles W. of Perpignan.

ILLE AND VILAINE, a department of France, bounded on the E. by the dept. of the Mayenne, and on the S. by the Lower Loire. It takes it's name from two rivers, the Ile and Vilaine, which unite together at Rennes, the capital.

ILLER, a river of Germany, which rises in the S. part of the bishoprick of Augsburg, passes by Kempton, Memmingen, Kirchberg, &c. and falls into the Danube, 2 miles above Ulm.

Illeston, Leicest. W. of Hallaton.

ILLINOIS, a lake of North America, about 15 miles long and 2 wide. Lat. 40. 35. N. lon. 89. 18. W. Also a large river, which rises near the SW. end of Lake Michigan, or, as some say, runs from Lake Illinois, and taking a SW. course, falls into the Mississippi, in lat. 40. N. Between the Illinois and the Ohio, is the country of a noted Indian nation, called the Illinois.

Illogan, St. Cornwall, N. of Redruth.

ILLOK, a town of Sclavonia, situated on the Danube, 16 miles W. of Peter Waradin.

ILMEN, a lake near the city of Novogorod, in Russia, about 48 miles long and 15 wide.

ILMENAU, a river of Westphalia, which passes by Oldenitadt, Lunenburg, &c. before it falls into the Elbe; and a town of Henneburg, in Franconia.

Ilmere, Bucks, between Tame and Aylesbury Vale. Ilmington, Warw. NW. of Shipton upon Stour.

ILMINSTER, a town of Somersetshire, containing about 300 houses. It has a considerable manufactory of narrow cloths, and is situated on the river Ille, in a dirty bottom, among hills, 26 miles SW. of Wells, and 137 W. by S. of London. Market on Saturday.

Ilfield, Hants, SE. of Basingstoke. Ilsham, Suffex, S. of Arundel. Ilshington, Devonf. NW. of Newton Bushel. Ilshington, Dorsetshire near Piddleton.

ILSLEY, EAST, a town of Berks, seated in a pleasant valley, between two hills, and excellent downs for feeding sheep, 14 miles NW. of Reading, and 53 W. of London. Market on Wednesday.

ILST, a town of W. Friesland, situated on or near the river Weymar, 5 miles SE. of Bolswaert.

ILSTADT, a town of Bavaria, near Passau.

Ilton, Devonf. on a creek, near Kingsbridge. Ilton, and it's Park, Somersetf. NW. of Ilminster. Imber, Wilts, near Warminster. Imberburn, Suffex, near E. Grinstead.

IMERITIA, or more properly IMIRET-TA, a country of Asia, between the Black Sea and the Caspian; bounded on the S. by Georgia; on the W. by Mingrelia; on the N. by Offetia; and on the E. by the Persian dominions. This country, properly speaking, is a part of Georgia. The late sovereign, the Czar Solomon, having forbidden the scandalous traffic of the noblemen in their peasants, offended the Turks so much, that he was driven from his throne, and compelled to live like a wild man, for 16 years, in the woods and caverns of the mountains, till the Russians reinstated him in his dominions. The revenues arise from a contribution of the peasants in wine, grain, and cattle, and from the tribute of the neighbouring princes. Among the extraordinary sources of revenue, confiscations have a considerable share; but all this is insufficient for the subsistence of the prince; he usually travels from house to house, and is entertained by his vassals, never changing his quarters, while they have the means of accommodating him. It will, of course, be understood, that the court of Imeritia is not remarkable for splendor, nor the prince's table sumptuously served. His usual fare consists of gorn, (a species of millet, ground and boiled into a paste (a piece of roasted meat, and some pressed caviar. These he eats with his fingers; forks and spoons being unknown in this country. At table he is frequently employed in judging causes, which he decides at his discretion, there being no law but his own will. He usually wears a coarse dress, of a brown colour, with a musket upon his shoulder; but, upon solemn occasions, he puts on a robe of rich gold brocade, and hangs round his neck a silver chain. He is distinguished from his subjects, by riding upon an ass, and by wearing boots. His civil ordinances are issued weekly, on the market day, by one of his servants, who ascends a tree, and with a loud voice proclaims the edict, which is communicated to the people, by each person, upon his return to the place of his abode. The inhabitants, estimated at about 20,000 families, are scattered over the country in small hamlets. They are less mixed with foreigners, and are accounted handsomer than the other Georgians. They are likewise more industrious: they send yearly considerable quantities of wine to the neighbouring parts of Georgia, in leather bags, carried by horses; but they are without manufactures, very poor and miserable, and cruelly oppressed by their landlords. The Imeritians are of the Greek religion; but their patriarch, who is generally of the royal family, can seldom read or write. Cutais is the capital of the present prince, the Czar David.

Imley, Northampton. S. of Brackley.

IMMENSTADT, a town of Konigsegg, in Suabia.

Immingham, Lincolnsh. near the coast, NW. of Grimsby.

IMOLA, a town of Romagna, in Italy.

Impington, 3 miles N. of Cambridge.

Ince, Lancashire, near Wigan.

Ince, Lancashire, near Altmouth.

INCHCOLM, a small island in the Frith of Forth, near the coast of Fife, but within the county of Edinburgh. Here are the fine ruins of a once celebrated monastery, founded, in 1123, by Alexander I. in gratitude for his escape, when driven on the island in a violent tempest, where he was hospitably treated, for three days, by a hermit, who entertained him with the milk of his cow, and a few shell fish. It was of the order of St. Augustine, and dedicated to St. Columba. At present, some fowls that haunt the ancient tower, and the rabbits that lodge in the mouldering foil, have full possession of this neglected spot.

Inchequin, or O'Quin's Island, in Cork, Munster, SW. of Youghal. Inchigeelagh, in Cork, Munster. It is a small village, situated in the midst of mountains, near the Lakes, or Loughs Allua and Gouganbarra, 6 miles SW. of Macroom, and 148 from Dublin. Inch, Isle, or Inis, Curcey, is properly a peninsula, in Down, Ulster, 74 miles from Dublin.

INCHKEITH, a desolate little island, of Mid-Lothianshire, in the Frith of Forth, lying midway between the two ports of Leith and Kinghorn. Here is a ruinous fort. The shores of both this island and Inchcolm are bold and rugged, exhibiting several deep caverns, shelving cliffs, and towering rocks. It is about a mile long; and on the W. side are vast strata of coral and shells. Here was formerly a chapel, dedicated to St. Marnock, the ruins of which are still to be seen here. It has 120 acres of arable land, 40 of brush-wood, and near 300 of moor.

Inchmarnock, a beautiful island, SW. of the Isle of Bute, on the W. coast of Scotland.

INDEN HOTUN, a town of Chinese Tartary, the capital of the Mantcheou Tartars, where they began to establish their empire over China. It is 420 miles ENE. of Peking.

INDIA, an extensive region in Asia, which lies between 66 and 108 deg. E.

lon. and 8 and 36 deg. N. lat. Under this name is generally understood all the countries which lie S. of Tartary, and extend from the eastern frontiers of Persia to the western coasts of China, divided into India within, and India without, the Ganges. The moderns have likewise included, under the denomination of the East Indies, the islands of Japan, with all the islands in the Eastern and Indian Oceans, nearly as far as New Holland and New Guinea. But the name of India is most frequently applied to that country only, which is distinguished in Asia, as well as in Europe, by the name of Hindoostan. See HINDOOSTAN.

INDIANA, a tract of country, situated on the Ohio, in the state of Virginia.

INDIES, WEST, the name given to a great number of islands in the Atlantic Ocean, which extend from the NW. extremity of the Bahama Islands, off the coast of Florida, in lat. 27. 45. N. in a south-easterly direction, to the Island of Tobago, which is 120 miles from the coast of Terra Firma, in 11 deg. 30 min. N. lat. They lie between 59 and 86 deg. W. lon. Cuba being the most western, and Barbadoes the most eastern, of all these islands. When Christopher Columbus discovered them, in 1492, he considered them as part of those vast regions in Asia, comprehended under the general name of India, to reach which, by a course due W. across the Atlantic Ocean, had been the grand object of his voyage; and this opinion was so general, that Ferdinand and Isabella, king and queen of Castile, in their ratification of their agreement, granted to Columbus, upon his return, gave them also the name of Indies. Even after the error, which gave rise to this opinion, was detected, and the true position of the New World was ascertained, the name has remained, and the appellation of the West Indies is still given to these islands, and that of Indians, to the inhabitants, not only of the islands, but of the two continents, of America. They are likewise called the Caribbee Islands, from the aborigines of the country; and the sea in which they lie, is sometimes called, by modern geographers, the Archipelago of the Caribbees. By the French, they are called the Greater and Less Antilles; the Greater comprehending Cuba, St. Domingo, Jamaica, and Porto Rico; and the Less, Aruba, Curaçoa, Bonair, Margaretta, and some others, near the coast of Terra Firma. Foreign geographers, however, are not agreed as to the meaning or application of the word, some applying it to the Caribbee Islands in general. Nautical men distinguish them, from the different courses taken by ships, into the Leeward and Windward Islands. The name of the Caribbees should properly be confined to the smaller islands, which lie between Porto Rico and Tobago. These were inhabited by the Caribbees, a hardy race of men, nowise resembling their feeble and timid neighbours in the larger islands. Even in later times, they have made a stout resistance in defence of the last territory (the Island of St. Vincent) which the rapacity of their invaders had left in their possession. The reader will find most of these islands treated of separately.

INDIANS OF NORTH AND SOUTH AMERICA, the original natives of these two vast continents. Of the manners of the North American Indians, the reader may have a general idea, by an account of those who inhabit the countries to the E. of the river Mississippi. These consist of 28 different nations; the principal of which are the Cherokees, the Chickasaws, the Choctaws, the Creeks, the Delawares; the Six Nations, the Shawanese, the Hurons, the Illinois, &c. Allowing about 700 to a nation, or tribe, they will contain, in all, 20,000 people. The Indians are not born white; and take a great deal of pains to darken their complexion, by anointing themselves with grease, and lying in the sun. They also paint their face, breasts, and shoulders of various colours, but generally red; and their features are neat, especially those of the women. They are of a middle stature, their limbs clean and straight, and scarcely any crooked or deformed person is to be found among them. In many parts of their bodies they tattoo themselves, or prick in gunpowder on the skin in very pretty figures. Some shave, or pluck the hair off their heads, except a patch about the crown, which is ornamented with beautiful feathers, beads, wampum, and such like baubles: and except the head and eyebrows, they pluck the hair with great diligence, from all parts of the body. Their ears are pared and stretched in a thong down to their shoulders. They are wound round with wire, to expand them, and adorned with silver pendants, rings, and bells, which they likewise wear in their noses. Some of them will have a large feather through the cartilage of the nose; and those who can afford it, wear a collar of wampum, a silver breastplate, and bracelets on the arms and wrists. A bit of cloth about the middle, a shirt of the English make, on which the bestow innumerable broaches to adorn it, a sort of cloth boot and moccasins, which are shoes of a make peculiar to the Indians, ornamented with porcupine quills, with a blanket or match-coat thrown over all, complete their dress at home; but when they go on expeditions, they leave their trinkets behind, and mere necessities serve them. There is little difference between the dress of the men and women, excepting that a short petticoat, and the hair, which is exceeding black and long, clubbed behind, distinguish some of the latter. They are such expert marksmen, that they will kill birds flying, fishes swimming, and wild beasts running. They are very intelligent people, quick of apprehension, sudden in execution, subtle in business, exquisite in invention, and industrious in action. They are of a very gentle and amiable disposition to those they think their friends, but as implacable in their enmity; their revenge being only completed by the entire destruction of their enemies. They are very hardy, bearing heat, cold, hunger, and thirst, in a surprising manner; and yet no people are more addicted to excess in eating and drinking, when it is conveniently in their power. The follies, nay mischief, they commit, when inebriated, are entirely laid to the liquor; and no one will revenge any injury (murder excepted) received from one who is no more himself. Among the Indians all men are equal, personal qualities being most esteemed. No distinction of birth, no rank, renders any man capable of doing prejudice to the rights of private persons; and there is no pre-eminence from merit, which begets pride, and which makes others too sensible of their own inferiority. Though there is perhaps less delicacy of sentiment in the Indians than among us, there is, however, abundantly more probity, with far less ceremony, or equivocal compliments. Their public conferences shew them to be men of genius; and they have, in a high degree, the talent of natural, or unstudied eloquence. They live dispersed in small villages, either in the woods, or on the banks of rivers, where they have little plantations of Indian corn and roots, not enough to supply their families half the year; and subsist the remainder of it by hunting, fishing, and fowling, and the fruits of the earth, which grow spontaneously in great plenty. Their huts are generally built of small logs, and covered with bark, each one having a chimney, and a door, on which they place a padlock. One of their towns, called Old Chelicothe, is built in form of a Kentucky station; that is, a parallelogram, or long square; and some of

of their houses are shingled. A long council-house extends the whole length of the town, where the chiefs of the nation frequently meet and consult of all matters of importance. Some huts are built by setting up a frame on forks, and placing bark against it; others of reeds, and surrounded with clay. The fire is in the middle of the wigwam; and the smoke passes through a little hole. They join reeds together by cords run through them, which serve them for tables and beds. They mostly lie upon skins of wild beasts, and sit on the ground. They have brass kettles and pots to boil their food. Gourds or calabashes, cut asunder, serve them for pails, cups, and dishes. The accounts of travellers, concerning their religion, are various. All agree, that they acknowledge one Supreme God. They adore the Great Spirit, and believe that his care is extended over them; and, that, 'he puts good into their hearts.' They also believe in a future state; that after death they shall be removed to their friends, who have gone before them, to an elysium, or paradise. The Wyandotts, near Detroit, and some others, have embraced the Romish faith, introduced among them by missionaries. The Shawanese, Cherokees, Chicafaws, and some others, are little concerned about religion. They have their festivals, and other rejoicing days, on which they dance and sing in a ring, taking hands, having so painted and disguised themselves, that it is difficult to know any of them; and after enjoying this diversion for a while, they retire to the place where they have prepared a feast of fish, flesh, fowls, and fruits; to which all are invited, and entertained with their country songs. They believe that there is great virtue in feasts for the sick. For this purpose, a young buck must be killed, and boiled, the friends and near neighbours of the patient invited, and having first thrown tobacco on the fire, and covered it up close, they all sit down in a ring, and raise a lamentable cry. They then uncover the fire, and kindle it up; and the head of the buck is first sent about, every one taking a bit, and giving a loud croak, in imitation of crows. They afterward proceed to eat all the buck, making a most harmonious, melancholy song; in which strain their music is particularly excellent. As they approach their towns, when some of their people are lost in war, they make great lamentations for their dead; and their cries of woe are answered by those within. They bear their deceased friends long in remembrance, often visit their graves, and even deck out their putrid remains with their best skins and other finery. Some nations abhor adultery, do not approve of a plurality of wives, and are not guilty of theft; but there are other tribes that are not so scrupulous. Among the Chicafaws, a husband may cut off the nose of his wife, if guilty of adultery; but men are allowed greater liberty. This nation despises a thief. Among the Cherokees they cut off the noses and ears of an adulteress; afterward her husband gives her a discharge. Their form of marriage is short: the man, before witnesses, gives the bride a deer's foot, and she, in return, presents him with an ear of corn, as emblems of their several duties. The women are very slaves, in many instances, to the men; in others, they are upon an equal footing, deliberating in the public assemblies, and, in private life, enjoying the privilege of declaring their affection, or paying their addresses to those they love. They are charged with being revengeful; but this revenge is seldom executed, but in cases of murder and adultery; and, indeed, the murderer is generally delivered up to the friends of the deceased, to do as they please. When one kills another, the deceased's friend kills him, and so they continue avenging one another's death till much blood is shed; and at last the quarrel is ended by mutual presents. Sometimes a chief, when offended, breaks off with a party, settles some distance, and then commences hostilities against his own people. When they take captives in war, they are exceedingly cruel, treating the unhappy prisoners in such a manner, that death would be preferable to life. They afterward give them plenty of food, load them with burdens, and when they arrive at their towns, they must run the gauntlet. In this, they exercise so much cruelty, that one would think it impossible they should survive their sufferings. Many are killed; but if one outlives this trial, he is adopted into a family as a son, and treated with paternal kindness; and if he avoids their suspicions of going away, he is allowed the same privileges as their own people. But sometimes their prisoners are destined to be tortured to death, in order to satiate the revenge of their conquerors. While their lot is in suspense, the prisoners themselves appear altogether unconcerned about what may befall them. They talk, they eat, they sleep, as if there were no danger impending: when the fatal sentence is intimated to them, they receive it with an unaltered countenance, raise their death-song, and prepare to suffer like men. The victors assemble as to a solemn festival, resolved to put the fortitude of the captives to the utmost proof. A scene ensues, the bare description of which is enough to chill the heart with horror. The prisoners are tied naked to a stake, but so as to be at liberty to move round it. All present, men, women, and children, fall upon them with knives and other instruments; and such is their cruel ingenuity in torturing, that, by avoiding to touch the vital part, they often prolong the scene of anguish for several days. In spite of all their sufferings, the victims continue to chaunt their death-song with a firm voice; they boast of their own exploits, they insult their tormentors for their want of skill to avenge the death of their friends and relations, they warn them of the vengeance that awaits them on account of what they are now doing, and excite their ferocity by the most provoking reproaches and threats. To display undaunted fortitude in such dreadful situations, is the noblest triumph of a warrior; to avoid the trial by a voluntary death, or to shrink under it, is deemed cowardly and infamous. If any one betray symptoms of timidity, his tormentors often dispatch him at once, with contempt, as unworthy of being treated like a man. Animated by those ideas, they endure, without a groan, what it seems almost impossible that human nature should sustain. Weary, at length, with contending with men, whose constancy they cannot vanquish, some chief puts a period to their sufferings, by dispatching them with his dagger or his club. The people of S. America gratify their revenge in a manner somewhat different, but with the same unrelenting rancour. Their prisoners, after meeting, at their first entrance, with the same rough reception as among the N. Americans, are not only exempt from injury, but treated with the greatest apparent kindness, feasted and caressed. But, by a refinement of cruelty, while they seem studious to attach their captives to life, their doom is irrevocably fixed. On an appointed day, the victorious tribe assembles, the prisoner is brought forth with great solemnity, he meets his lot with undaunted firmness, and is dispatched with a single blow. The moment he falls, the women seize the body, and dress it for the feast. They besmear their children with the blood, in order to kindle in their bosoms a hatred of their enemies, and all join in feeding upon the flesh with amazing greediness and exultation. Wherever this practice prevails, captives never escape death; but they are not tortured with the same cruelty as among tribes which are less accustomed to such horrid feasts. The Indians of S. America, immediately under the Spanish government, although the most depressed order of men in the country which belonged to their ancestors, are now far from being treated with that rigour and cruelty which was laid to the charge of the first conquerors of that continent. They are no longer considered as slaves: on the contrary, they are reputed as freemen, and entitled to the privileges of subjects. A certain tax, or tribute, is indeed imposed upon them, and certain services required; but these are all under the due regulations of policy and humanity. The Indians who live in the principal towns, are entirely subject to the Spanish laws and magistrates; but, in their own villages, they are governed by caciques, some of whom are the descendants of their ancient lords; others are named by the Spanish viceroys. These regulate the petty affairs of the people under them, according to maxims of justice, transmitted to them by tradition from their ancestors. To the Indians, this jurisdiction lodged in such friendly hands, affords some consolation; and so little formidable is this dignity to their new masters, that they often allow it to descend by hereditary right. For the farther relief of men so much exposed to oppression, the Spanish court has appointed an officer in every district, with the title of Protector of the Indians. It is his duty, as the name implies, to assert the rights of the Indians; to appear as their defender in the courts of justice; and to set bounds to the encroachments and exactions of his countrymen. A portion of the annual tribute is destined for the salaries of the caciques and protectors; another part is appropriated to the payment of their tribute in years of famine, or when a particular district is afflicted by any extraordinary local calamity. Provision too is made, by various laws, that hospitals should be founded in every new settlement, for the receptions of Indians. Such hospitals have accordingly been erected, both for the indigent and infirm, in Lima, Cusco, and Mexico, where the Indians are treated with tenderness and humanity. See ESKIMAUX, INDIES, WEST, PATAGONIA, and ST. VINCENT'S.

INDORE, a modern city of Hindoostan, capital of a territory in the province of Malwa, subject to one of the Poonah

Mahratta chiefs. It is 30 miles S. of Ongien, and 290 SSW. of Agra. Lat. 22. 56. N. lon. 76. 11. E.

INDRAPORE, a town and factory of the Dutch, on the western coast of Sumatra. It is 100 miles NW. of Bencoolen.

INDRE, a department of France, bounded by that of Cher on the E. and Vienne on the W. It has its name from a river, which rises in the dept. of the Creuse, and passing through this department, and that of Indre and Loire, by the towns of St. Severe, Chateauroux, Chatillon, Loches, Cormery, &c. falls into the Loire below Chinon, or at Rigny, between Saumur and Tours. Chateauroux is the capital.

INDRE AND LOIRE, a department of France, lying to the NW. of the dept. of Indre. Tours is the capital.

INDUS, a great river of Hindoostan, called by the natives Sinde, or Sindeh. It is formed of about ten principal streams, which descend from the Persian and Tartarian mountains; but, according to Major Rennell, the sources of these streams must be far more remote than the sides of these mountains. From the city of Attock, in about lat. 32. 27. downward to Moultan, to the conflux of the Jenaub, or Chunaub, it is commonly named the river of Attock. Below the city of Moultan, it proceeds, in a SW. direction, through the province of that name, and that of Sinde, enters the Western Indian Ocean by several mouths, NW. of the Gulf of Cutch. It is a fine, deep, and navigable river, for vessels of any burden; the different branches are also most of them navigable to a great extent; its mouth, however, is so choked up with sand, that no ship can enter it.

INGOLDSTADT, a strong town of Bavaria, with a university, founded in 1472. It was besieged, in 1632, by Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden, without success. It is seated on the Danube, in the midst of a morass, 5 miles NE. of Newberg, and 38 N. by W. of Munich. Lat. 48. 46. N. lon. 11. 10. E.

Ingram, Northumb. W. of Alnwick.

INGRIA, a province of the Russian empire, which now forms the government of St. Petersburg. It is bounded on the N. by the river Neva and the Gulf of Finland, on the E. and S. by the government of Novogorod and that of Pleskow, and on the W. by the Gulf of Finland and the governments of Esthonia and Riga. It is about 150 miles long and 50 broad. The Czar Peter the Great wrested it from the Swedes, and it was confirmed to him by the treaty of Nystadt, in 1721. At that time, the inhabitants of the flat country were a Finnish people, but little different from the Fins of Carelia, as to their language and manners. They were called Ichortzi, from the river Ichora, which runs into the Neva. Ingria did not retain its ancient Swedish privileges; on the contrary, Peter made a present of one part of the Ichortzi to certain Russian nobles; who, on their side, were obliged to people the less cultivated cantons of Ingria, with colonies of Russians from their estates; and thence it is, that we often see a village of Russians surrounded by villages of Finns. Before the conquest of this country, the Ingrians had Lutheran preachers for every canton; but numbers of them have since conformed to the profession of the Greek faith. The country abounds with with various wild animals, particularly rein deer.

INSBRUCK, a town of Germany, capital of the Tyrolese. It is very populous, and though not large within the walls, has extensive suburbs, in which are some considerable palaces, churches, and convents. It is seated in a pleasant valley, on the river Inn, 60 miles S. of Munich. Lat. 47. 10. N. lon. 11. 27. E.

INSTADT. See PASSAU.

Inflow, Devonsh. near Biddeford, at the conflux of the Taw and Towridge. Inswork, Devonsh. a peninsula at Milbrook Townsend. Intwood, S. of Norwich.

Inver, in Donegal, Ulster.

*INVERARY, a town in Argyleshire, containing upwards of 1800 inhabitants. Here are manufactures of linen and woollen, as also considerable works for smelting iron by means of charcoal. One ship belonging to the town is engaged in foreign trade, and about half a dozen are employed in imports of meal, coals, merchant's goods, &c. exporting wool, timber, and oak bark. It is seated on the NW. side of Loch Fyne, near which is a castle, the seat of the Duke of Argyle, 75 miles NW. of Edinburgh, and 45 NW. of Glasgow.

INVERBERVIE. See BERVIE.

Inveresk, a village of Edinburghshire, seated on the E. side of the mouth of the river Esk, near the Frith of Forth, 4 miles E. of Edinburgh.

*INVERKEITHING, a town of Fifehire, situated in a bay of the Frith of Forth, 18 miles NW. of Edinburgh. Before the entrance of the harbour, there is a large and safe bay, which affords excellent shelter for ships in all winds. On the W. side of the harbour is a large, Dutch-built vessel, used as a lazaretto. Here are two commodious quays, for the landing and receiving of goods; and great improvements have been lately made to accommodate the shipping still further. Several ships belong to this place, but none of any considerable burden. Some of them sail to foreign parts, and the rest are chiefly employed in the coal and coasting trade. Sometimes, between 40 and 50 vessels wait here for coals, especially in the winter season.

*INVERNESS, a populous, flourishing town, of Scotland, capital of a county of the the same name, pleasantly situated on the S. bank of the river Ness, and overlooking the Frith of Murray. It has a safe and convenient harbour, and a good deal of shipping. Several large buildings have been erected on the N. side of the town, in which a considerable manufactory of ropes and canvass is carried on. It is a royal burgh, holding its first charter from Malcolm Canmore. Over the river Ness is a handsome bridge, of seven arches. The salmon fishery in this river is very considerable, and is let to some fishermen of London. A little to the W. of this town, is the remarkable vitrified fort, called Craig Phadrick; the stones, composing it's walls, appear to have been partly melted by fire. Inverness is 50 miles NE. of Fort William, and 106 NNW. of Edinburgh. Lat. 57. 30. N. lon. 4. 5. W.

INVERNESS, the most extensive county of Scotland, bounded on the W. by the ocean; on the N. by Ross-shire; on the E. by the counties of Nairne, Murray, Aberdeen, and Perth; and on the S. by those of Perth and Argyle. It's extent from N. to S. is about 45 miles; and from E. to W. 75. The northern part is very mountainous and barren. The woody mountains are the haunts of stags and roes. The capercailzie is also seen sometimes among the lofty pines; the heath is possessed by wild fowl; and the lofty summits by ptarmigans and Alpine hares. This county has several considerable lakes; being divided, in a manner, into two equal parts, by Loch Ness, Loch Oich, Loch Lochy, and Loch Eil; all which might be united by a canal, that would form a communication between the two seas. The trout lakes in this county are seldom or never known to freeze; much less are the arms of the sea, even in the most northern parts of Scotland, subject to be frozen in the hardest seasons; while the Texel, and many bays and great rivers in Holland and Germany, are covered with ice. The southern part of the shire is also very mountainous, and is supposed to be the most elevated ground in Scotland. The extensive plains which surround the lakes, are in general, fertile; and the high grounds feed many sheep and black cattle; the rearing and selling of which is the chief trade of the inhabitants. Limestone, iron ore, and some traces of different minerals have been found in this country, with beautiful rock crystals of various tints; but no mines have been worked hitherto with much success. The principal river is the Spey; but there are many others of inferior note, as the Ness, Fyers, Glass, Lochy, &c. The people in the high parts of the country, and on the western shore speak Gaelic or Erse, but the people of fashion in Inverness, and it's neighbourhood, use the English language, and pronounce it with propriety.

INVERURY, a small town of Aberdeen-shire, situated on the confluence of the rivers Don and Ury, 15 miles NW. of Aberdeen.

Inworth, Essex, between Braxted and Messing. Inzaeres, Dorsetshire, in Burton parish, near the river Bridy.

JONES, a town of N. Carolina, situated on the N. side of the Roanoke River, opposite Halifax.

Jonesborough, in Armagh, Ulster.

JONES TOWN, a town of Pennsylvania.

JONKIÖPING, or JORTERKÖPING, a town of Sweden, capital of the province of Smoländ, and seat of the superior court of justice for Gothland. The houses are chiefly of wood covered with turf; for, excepting the largest towns and country seats, few of the buildings in Sweden are roofed with tiles. They are principally covered with turf or moss; no thatching being used, as both too dear, and too dangerous in case of fire. In order to keep out the rain, large layers of birch bark are spread over the timber-work of the roof, and covered with turf or moss. These turf roofs make a singular appearance, many of them producing herbage, which is occasionally cut for the use of the cattle; and a few are ornamented with flowers. The town, which contains about 3000 inhabitants, and has a manufacture of arms, is seated on the S. side of the Lake Wetter, 50 miles NW. of Calmar. Lat. 57. 48. N. lon. 14. 7. E.

Ipseley, Warwickshire, near Studley. Ipston, in Tunfield parish, partly in Bucks, and partly in Oxfordshire. Ipsstones, Staffordshire, near the river Churnet, a mile below Kingsley. The soil here is noted for producing the best ruddle, or red ochre for marking sheep,

*IPSWICH, an ancient and populous, but irregularly built town, of Suffolk, seated on the river Orwell, near the place where the fresh and salt water meet, forming a sort of half-moon, or crescent, on it's bank. Across the river there is a bridge, leading to suburb Stoke Hamlet. Here are several public buildings and a custom-house, with a good quay. It has declined, however, from it's former consequence; the manufactures of broad cloth and canvas are at an end; and it's present commerce chiefly depends upon the malting and exportation of corn to London, and timber to the different dock-yards. It has a considerable coasting trade, and a small share of foreign commerce, and has lately sent ships to Greenland. Vessels of great burden are obliged to stop at some distance below the town. It is 20 miles NE. of Colchester, and 69 NE. of London. Markets on Tuesday and Thursday for small meat, on Wednesday and Friday for fish, and on Saturday for provisions of all kinds.

IPSWICH, a town of Massachusetts, situated on a river of the same name, near the sea, 22 miles N. of Boston. The harbour is inconvenient, on account of a bar and shoals. Also a town of New Hampshire.

IQUIQUE, an island in the S. Pacific Ocean, near the coast of Peru. It is about a mile in circumference, and is inhabited by a few Indians and slaves, who are principally employed in collecting a yellow earth, formed by the dung of birds, and manure for vines, and with which 8 or 10 vessels have been annually loaded for about a century past. Lat. 20. 20. S.

IRABATTEY, a name given to the river Ava, in some part of it's course.

IRAC, IRAC ARABIA, or BABYLONIAN IRAC, (the ancient CHALDEA) is a country of Asia, watered by the rivers Tigris and Euphrates, and so called from the Desert of Arabia, which lies to the W. of it. The NE. parts are fertile, with a number of cities and towns; but towards the SW. it is a dreary wilderness. It is mostly under the dominion of the Turks. Bagdad and Bassora are the principal places.

IRAC AGEMI, or PERSIAN IRAC, a province of Persia, is bounded by Ghilan and Mezanderan on the N. Farsistan and Cushtistan on the S. Chorasian on the E. and on the W. by the Arabian Irac. It is about 150 leagues in length and 120 in breadth. The air is healthy, but the climate hot, and it hardly ever rains, in the summer, for 6 months together. The country is generally barren, although there are vast and fertile plains near the rivers. Musk, manna, galbanum, and grapes, of which they make white wine, are it's principal productions. They reckon about 40 cities or towns. Ispahan is the capital.

IRBIL, supposed to be the ancient ARBELA, a fortress of Asiatic Turkey, in Curdistian, 80 miles SE. of Betlis.

Irby, Lanc. near Kirby Lonsdale. Irby, Linc. E. of Spilsby. Irch, or Earch, a river in Carnarvonshire, which runs into the Irish Channel at Pulhely. Irckenfield, Heref. on the E. side of the Golden Vale. Ireby. See Jerby.

IREKEN, JERKIN, or YARKAN, a rich, populous, and largest town, of Kaschgar, or Little Bucharia, where the Grand Khan of the Eluth Tartars principally resides. The town is well built of bricks, dried in the sun, and the palace of the khan is large, but not handsome. The environs are fertile. It is the staple town of the trade carried on between the Indies and the N. part. of Asia, and is 90 miles SE. of Kaschgar. Lat. 39. 6. N. lon. 79. 5. E.

IRELAND, one of the British islands, lying to the W. of that of Great Britain. It is bounded on the E. by St. George's Channel, or the Irish Sea, which separates it from England and Wales; on the NE. by a channel about 20 miles broad, which separates it from Scotland; and on every other side by the ocean. It lies between lon. 5. 43. and 10. 38. W. and between lat. 51. 15. and 55. 13. N. being about 287 miles in length, and 155 in breadth. It is divided into 4 provinces, viz. Ulster on the north; Munster on the south; Leinster on the east; and Connaught on the west. These are subdivided into 32 counties, viz. Carlow, Dublin, Kildare, Kilkenny, King's County, Longford, Louth, Meath, Queen's County, West Meath, Wexford, Wicklow, in the province of Leinster. Antrim, Armagh, Cavan, Down, Donegal, Fermanagh, Londonderry, Monaghan, and Tyrone, in the province of Ulster. Clare, Cork, Kerry, Limerick, Tipperary, and Waterford, in the province of Munster. Galway, Leitrim, Mayo, Roscommon, and Sligo, in the province of Connaught. The air is mild and temperate, being cooler in summer, and warmer in winter, than in England, though it is not so clear and pure, nor so proper for ripening corn and fruits. It is more humid than in England; but this quality is pretty much mended, and will be more so, when the bogs and morasses are drained. In general, it is a fruitful country, well watered with lakes and rivers; and the soil, in most parts, is very good and fertile; even in those places, where the bogs and morasses have been drained, there is good meadow ground. It produces corn, hemp, and flax, in great plenty; and the herds of cattle are so numerous, that their beef and butter are exported into foreign parts; the English, and foreign ships, frequently come to victual in Irish ports. The principal riches and commodities of Ireland are cattle, hides, wool, tallow, lact, butter, cheese, cheese, wood, salt, honey, wax, furs, hemp, and more especially fine linen cloth, which they have brought to great perfection, and their trade in it is vastly increased. This country is exceedingly well situated for foreign trade, and has many secure and commodious bays, creeks, and harbours, especially on the W. coast. Their laws differ but little from those of England; and the national establishment of religion is the same. The members of parliament usually sat for life, unless upon the demise of the king of Great Britain; but, in 1768, their parliaments were made octennial. Formerly, this kingdom was entirely subordinate to that of Great Britain, whose parliament could make laws to bind the people of Ireland; and an appeal might be made from their courts of justice to the house of lords in England; but, in 1782, it was declared, that although Ireland was an imperial crown, inseparably annexed to that of Britain (on which connection the interest and happiness of both nations essentially depended) yet the kingdom of Ireland was distinct, with a parliament of its own, and that no body of men were competent to make laws for Ireland, except the king, lords, and commons thereof. And, some time after, this declaration being thought insufficient, the British legislature, by an express act of parliament for that purpose, relinquished all claim of right to interfere with the judgment of the Irish courts, or to make laws to bind Ireland in time to come. The lord lieutenant of Ireland, as well as the council, are appointed, from time to time, by the king. The native Irish are described as impatient of abuse and injury, quick of apprehension, implacable in resentment, ardent in all their affections, and remarkably hospitable. In the country there certainly remains a great deal of this amiable national characteristic, and even in their towns, formality and etiquette are often so lost in hearty salutations, and a familiar manner of address, that the stranger soon feels himself at home, and imagines the people about him all relations. There are some considerable mountains in Ireland, the chief of which are the Knock Patrick, Sliew Bloomy, and Curliou Hills. Of all it's bogs, that called the Bog of Allen is the most considerable. The chief lakes are Lough Lean, Lough Erne, Lough Neagh, and Lough Coribb; and it's principal rivers are the Shannon, Boyne, Barrow, Liffey, Nore, and Suir. The kingdom is said to have been formerly full of woods, but the case is now so different, that it has been found necessary to plant new ones, and to give parliamentary encouragement for their preservation and increase. The mineral productions of this country have been little known till of late years, the natives in general having given themselves (at least for some centuries past) little trouble about them. Nevertheless, copper, lead, iron, and even silver ores have been found in the Irish mines; some vestiges of works of this sort appear at Clontarf, on the edge of Dublin Bay. In the county of Antrim, there is a mine which consists of a mixture of silver and lead, every 30lb. of lead ore producing about a pound of silver. There is another in Connaught, of the same kind; and one still richer in Wicklow. About 12 miles from Limerick, two mines have been discovered, one of copper, and the other of lead. Iron mines are dispersed all over the kingdom. There are likewise quarries of marble, slate, and freestone, and the earth produces in various places, coal and turf for firing.

IRELAND, one of the Bermuda islands.

IRISH CHANNEL, or ST. GEORGE'S CHANNEL, that part of the Atlantic Ocean, which is between the coast of Ireland and Great Britain.

Irmingland, Norf. NW. of Alesham. Irk, a river in Lanc. which runs into the Irwell, near Manchester.

IRKUTSK, a town of Russia, capital of a government to which it gives name. It is the sea of a Greek bishop, and a place of considerable commerce, the caravans which trade to China passing through it. It is situated on the river Angara, near it's confluence with the Irkut, near the Lake Baikal, 140 miles ESE. of Kolivan.

IRKUTSKOI, the largest, but least peopled, government of Russia, comprising all the eastern parts of Siberia, from the Northern Ocean to the frontiers of Chinese Tartary, and from the boundaries of the governments of Tobolsk and Kolivan, on the W. to the Eastern Ocean. This large territory territory was gradually conquered, and appropriated by the Russians, in their desultory excursions from Tobolsk, and is now divided into the four provinces of Irkutsk, Nertchinsk, Yakutsk, and Okotsk, from the four principal towns.

Iruam, Linc. near Corby, pleasantly situated, with good water, and in a wholesome air. Iron Aston, Glouc. 3 miles from Bristol, at the conflux of the Stoure and Laden, which form the river Frome. Much iron has formerly been dug up in this parish, and many iron works; and great heaps of cinders, are still to be seen here. It has a coal-work now carrying on. In the church-yard is one of the crosses, arched over, from whence the priests used to harangue the people on particular holidays.

IRONGRAY, a town of Kirkcudbrightshire, 16 miles E. of Kirkcudbright.

IRON MOUNTAINS, mountains of N. America, which divide the Tennesse government from N. Carolina. Lat. 35. 25. S. lon. 83. o. W.

IRROMANGO, an island of the New Hebrides, in the S. Sea, nearly 80 miles in circuit. Lat. 18. 48. S. lon. 169. 20. E.

IRONAM, one of the New Hebrides, in the S. Sea, near Tanna.

Irted, Norf. SW. of Hickling. Irt, a river of Cumb. which runs into the Irish Channel below Carlton, not far from Ravenglass. In it are found the muscles, that breed a sort of pearl, vulgarly called shell-berries. Some gentlemen obtained a patent for this fishery, but we do not find that it turned to much account. Irthing, a river of Cumb. which runs into the Eden, about 2 miles E. of Carlisle. Irthington, Cumb. on the river Irthing, near Brampton. Irton, or Irtondale, Cumb. SE. of Egremont, near Wasdale, on the river Irt.

IRTYSH, a large river in Siberia, which rises in Tartary, and running from the S. to the NW. falls into the Oby, about 200 miles N. by E. of Tobolsk. The NW. shore is low pasture ground; on the other side, is a prodigious number of black bears, wolves, and red and grey foxes, beside the best grey squirrels in all Siberia. This river abounds with fish, particularly sturgeon and delicate salmon.

IRVINE*, or IRWIN, a sea-port of Ayrshire, seated on a river of the same name, which separates the counties of Ayr and Lanerk, near its influx into the Clyde, 15 miles E. of the Isle of Arran, and 26 SW. of Glasgow. In 1790, there were 51 vessels belonging to this port, the largest of which was 160 tons, and the smallest of 33. About 24,000 chaldrons of coals are exported annually to Ireland: as also considerable quantities of woollen goods, carpeting, muslins, lawns, and linen; the principal imports are hemp, iron, deals, ship-timber, and corn, from Memel, Norway, &c. The number of inhabitants in the town and parish is estimated at 4500.

Irwell, a river of Lanc. which rises above Bolton, flows thence to Manchester, and falls into the Mersey below Flixton, about 7 miles above Warrington. Irwon, a river in Brecknocksh. which runs into the Wye at Builth.

ISABELLA FORT, on the river Scheldt, opposite Antwerp; also a fort in Dutch Flanders, near Sluys.

ISABELLA, ST. the largest of the Isles of Solomon, in the S. Sea. It was discovered by the Spaniards in the year 1568. Also a town on the N. coast of the island of St. Domingo, built by Christopher Columbus, in the year 1495. Lon. 71. 20. W.

Isbury, Berks, near Lambourn. Isby Walton, Leic. near Castle Dunnington.

ISCHIA, an island of Naples, about 10 miles in circuit, and laying 8 or 10 miles W. of the city of Naples. It is full of agreeable valleys, which produce excellent fruits; mountains, on which grow vines of an exquisite kind; rivers, and fine gardens. It abounds in game, has several hot springs, and is much resorted to by invalids, on account of its healthy air.

ISCHIA, a town of Naples, capital of an island of the same name. It stands upon a rock, which is joined to the island by a strong bridge; the rock is about 7 furlongs in circumference, and the city is like a pyramid of houses piled one upon another, which makes a very singular and striking appearance. At the end of the bridge are iron gates, which open into a subterraneous passage, through which they enter the city. Lat. 40. 41. N. lon. 14. 2. E.

Isel, Cumberland, near Cockermouth, 3 miles up the Derwent. Iselsham, Cambridgeshire, NE. of Spoham.

ISENACH. See EISNACH.

ISENBURG, a town of Mark, Westphalia; a town in the circle of the Lower Rhine, situated on the Iser, with a castle on a sharp rock, built by Charlemagne, 10 miles N. of Coblentz; and a town of Itenberg, circle of Upper Rhine, 3 miles S. of Frankfort on the Maine.

ISENBURG, UPPER, a county in the Wetterau, Upper Rhine, about 30 miles long long and 10 wide; divided among several branches of the house of Isenburg.

ISENBURG, LOWER, a county in the Lower Rhine, formerly governed by counts of it's own; but now (except a small part possessed by the counts of Wied-Runkel, and the barons of Walderdorf) included in the electorate of Treves.

ISENGHEIN, a town of the late Austrian Netherlands, seated on the river Mandeira, 5 miles from Courtray.

ISER, a pretty large river of Germany, which rises in the Tyrolese, about 5 miles N. from Inspruck, and having passed by Munich, Landschut, Landau, &c. falls into the Danube, about 2 miles below Deckendorf.

ISERE, a department of France, a part of the ci-devant Dauphiny, and so called from a river which rises in the dept. of Mont Blanc, and passing through the middle of this department by the towns of Monsteir, Montmelian, Grenoble, &c. falls into the Rhone, about 3 miles N. of Valence. This river is navigable for boats as far as Montmelian. Grenoble is the principal town.

ISENARTS, or EISENARTS, a considerable town of Stiria, famous for it's iron mines. It is 30 miles NW. of Gratz.

ISERNIA, a town of Moliso, in Naples. Iseton on the Isle, Durham, SW. of Bishop Auckland. Isfey, Wilts, N. of the Thames, near Cricklade. Isfar, Northumberland, in the manor of Felton.

ISIGNI, a town in the dept. of Calvados, with a small harbour, 15 miles W. of Bayeux; also a town in the dept. of the Channel, 9 miles SSE. of Avranches.

Isfer, or Isis, a river in Brecknockshire, that runs into the Usk, at Aberisfer.

ISIS, a name frequently given to the river Thame, before it joins the Thames at Dorchester. See THAMES.

Isis Parlis, in the E. part of the parish of Penrith, in Cumberland, on the N. bank of the Eamont, are two caverns, or grottoes, dug out of the solid rock, and sufficient to contain 100 men. The passage to them is very narrow and dangerous; and, perhaps, it's perilous access may have given it it's present name: though the vulgar tell strange stories of one Isis, a giant who lived here in former times, and like the Cacus of fabulous antiquity, used to seize men and cattle, and draw them into his den, to devour them. But it is highly probable, that these subterraneous chambers were made for a secure retreat in time of sudden danger; and the iron gates, which were taken away not long ago, confirm this supposition.

ISLANDS, BAY OF, a bay of New Zealand, on the NE. coast of the northern of the two islands that go under that name.

ISLAY, or ILA, one of the Western Isles of Scotland, to the SW. of Jura, from which it is separated by a narrow strait or sound. It's greatest length is 25 miles; it's breadth about 18. The principal village is Bowmore, which is in a manner, a new town, and has a convenient harbour. The inhabitants are between 7 and 8000. The face of the country is hilly. Here are mines of copper, emery, quicksilver, lead ore, and black lead; with immense stores of limestone, marl, coral, and shell-sand, for manure. Some corn and flax is raised here, and numerous droves of cattle are annually exported. In this, and some of the neighbouring islands, multitudes of adders infest the heath. On the NW. side of the island is the cave of Sannegmore, which is a grotto, divided into a number of far-winding passages, sometimes opening into fine expanses; again closing, for a long space, into galleries, and forming a curious subterraneous labyrinth. There are also many other caverns, the haunts of numerous wild pigeons, that lodge and breed in them. The goats that feed among the rocks are so wild, that they are shot like deer.

Isle, Shrop. 2 miles from Shrewsbury; is a peninsula formed by the Severn, where those floats, called Coracles, are much used. They are of a form almost oval, and made of split, fallow twigs, interwoven, the part under the water covered with a horse's hide. Only one man can sit in them, who rows very swiftly with one hand, while, with the other, he manages his fishing tackle. A coracle is about 5 feet long and 3 broad, round at the bottom, and so light, that the fishermen carry them on their backs to and from the water.

ISLE ADAM, a town in the dept. of Seine and Oise, seated on the river Oise, 6 miles NNE. of Pontoise.

Isle Along; see Annalong, Isle of.

ISLE OF BEEVES, an island in the Bay of Campeachy, about 17 miles in length and 8 in breadth. It abounds in cattle and excellent fruits. Lat. 18. 30. N. lon. 91. 30. W.

Isle of Dogs, Midd. a part of Poplar Marsh, so named by the seamen in passing it, when the kings had a palace at Greenwich, and the royal hounds were kenneled here.

ISLE DE DIEU, or D'YEU, an island on the coast of France, about 7 miles long and 2 wide. It is 15 miles SSW. of Noirmoutier. Lat. 46. 45. N. lon. 2. 15. W.

ISLE DE FRANCE. See FRANCE, ISLE OF.

ISLE JOURDAIN, a town in the dept. of Gera, in an island of the little river Save, 8 miles N. of Lombez; also a town in the dept. of the Vienne.

ISLE ROUSSE, a town of Corsica.

ISLE AND VILAINE, a dept. of France, having the English Channel, and the dept. of the Channel on the N. and the dept. of the Lower Loire on the S. Rennes is the capital.

ILLEBEN. See EISLEBEN.

ISLEWORTH, a town in Middlesex, 9 miles W. of London. It is situated on the river Thames, opposite to Richmond.

Isley, Cornw. SW. of Padstow. Islington, Norf. near Lynn Marsh. Islington, a large village to the N. of London, to which it is now contiguous. On the NW. is the new village of Pentonville, to which it is likewise united. The New River, which is a great ornament to this place, is received, at the SW. end of it, into a large reservoir, called the New River Head, whence it's water is conveyed in pipes, to all parts of the metropolis. The parish is very extensive, including the hamlets of Upper and Lower Holloway, Kingland Green, and three sides of Newington Green. Near the New River Head, is a noted spring of chalybeate water, called New Tunbridge Wells. Islip, Northamptonshire, near Thrapston.

ISLIP, a town of Oxfordshire, chiefly noted for the birth and baptism of Edward the Confessor, The chapel wherein Edward was baptized, at a small distance N. from the church, was desecrated during Cromwell's usurpation, and converted to the meanest uses of a farm yard. It is built of stone, 15 yards long and 7 broad, and retains traces of the arches of an oblong window at the E. end. At present it has a roof of thatch, and is still called the king's chapel. The manor was given by Edward the Confessor to Westminster Abbey, to which it still belongs. It has also some remains of an ancient palace, said to have been King Ethelred's. By the Oxfordshire canal, it communicates with all the late inland navigations. It has a good market for sheep, and is 36 miles NW. of London, on the road to Aberystwith.

ISMAIL, a town of Bessarabia. It was taken by storm by the Russians, under General Suwarrow, on the 22d of December 1790; and it is said, that the long siege and the capture did not cost less than 10,000 men. The most atrocious part of the transaction is, that the garrison (whose firmness would have received, from a less sanguinary foe, the highest applause) were massacred by the merciless conquerors, to the amount of, by their own account, 30,000 men, and the place was abandoned to the fury of the brutal soldiery. Imail is seated on the N. side of the Danube, 140 miles SW. of Ockzakow. Lat. 45. 11. N. lon. 29. 30. E.

ISMID, or IS NIKMID. See NICOMEDIA.

ISNIC, a town of Natolia, the see of a Greek archbishop, yet containing scarcely 300 houses. It is the antient Nice, famous for the first general council held here in 325, and which promulged the Nicene Creed as an article of faith. There is now nothing remaining of its ancient splendour but an aqueduct. Silk forms the principal article of trade among the inhabitants, who are mostly Jews. It is seated in a fertile country, on a lake which abounds with fish, and communicates with the Sea of Marmora, 60 miles SE. of Constantinople.

ISNY, an imperial town of the Algau, in Suabia, with a famous abbey of Benedictine monks. It is seated on the river Isny, 40 miles S. of Ulm.

ISOLA, a sea-port of Calabria Ultra; and a town of Terra di Lavoro, both in Naples; also a town of Istria; and a river of the Tyrolese, which runs into the Drave near Leintz.

ISONA, a town of Catalonia.

ISPAHAN, a celebrated city of Asia, capital of Persia, seated in the province of Irac-Agemi, and thought by some, to be the finest city in the East. It stands in the middle of a plain, surrounded on all sides by mountains, at 8 miles distance, which rise gradually in the form of an amphitheatre. There is no river, except a small one, called Zenderoud, which supplies almost all the houses with water, and over which are several fine bridges. It is nearly of an oval form, with well-built houses and flat roofs, on which they walk, eat, and even sleep in the summer time, for the sake of the cool air. The walls are built of mud, and about 20 miles in compass, but being kept in no repair, and hidden by the adjoining houses and gardens, they have but a mean appearance, and are hardly to be discovered. The Meidan Shah, or Royal Square, is 440 paces long and 160 broad, surrounded by a canal, built with bricks, cemented by a black mortar, which, in time, becomes harder than freestone. Here are a great number of magnificent palaces; and that of the king is one of the most spacious in the world, being 5 miles in circumference: it's great portico stands in the royal square, and is built with porphyry, and very high. There are 260 mosques, among which the royal mosque, at the S. end of the square, is adorned with an inconceivable profusion of gold, azure, and other ornaments; many of the figures, decorations, &c. on it's portico, being wrought in a manner unknown to our European architects; 1800 large caravanseras, above 260 public baths, a prodigious number of coffee-houses, and some very fine streets, in which are canals planted with trees; though, generally speaking, the other streets are narrow, crooked, and not paved; they are, however, more free from dirt and dust than many great cities in Europe, as the air here is very dry, and every housekeeper waters the street before his own door twice a day. The inhabitants were formerly computed at 1,000,000; but, what with intestine broils and civil wars, this kingdom has been almost torn to pieces, by which the principal towns are greatly depopulated. There are 3 large suburbs; that called Joisa, is inhabited by Armenians; Halenbath, by Georgians; and Kebrabath by Pagans. Though it is at a distance from the sea, it carries on a great trade, the people of several nations resorting there for the sake of traffic. It is 265 miles NE. of Bussarah, 300 S. of the Caspian Sea, and 1400 SE. of Constantinople. Lat. 32.25. N. lon. 52.55. E.

ISSEL, or YSSEL, and ISSEL, or YSSEL, THE LITTLE, two rivers of the United Provinces. The former rises in Westphalia, passes by Doesburg, Zutphen, Deventer, &c. and falls into the Zuyder Zee, by two mouths, a little below Campen; the latter waters Ysselstein, Montfort, Gonda, &c. and falls into the Maese, 2 miles above Rotterdam.

ISSEL, OLD, a river which rises in the N. part of the duchy of Cleves, and runs into the Issel at Doesburg.

Ifferkelly, in Galway, Connaught.

ISSEQUIBO, a flourishing settlement of the Dutch, in Guiana, S. America, contiguous to that of Demerary, and 8 or 10 miles W. of the town of Surinam. It is seated on the river Issequibo, which is about 3 leagues wide at it's mouth, and runs into the Atlantic in lat. 6.45. N. and lon. 63.20. W. It's principal productions are sugar, coffee, and cotton. It has been twice taken by the English; in 1781, but restored by the treaty of peace, in 1783; and since the commencement of the present war; it still remains in their possession.

ISSOIRE, an ancient town in the dept. of Puy de Dome, near which are found amethysts, of as beautiful a colour as those of the East, but not so hard. Issoire is seated on the river Couze, near the Allier, 15 miles SSE. of Clermont.

ISSOUDUN, a town in the dept. of Indre, containing about 10,000 inhabitants. It's trade is in wool and cattle; and it has considerable manufactories of cloth, hats, and stockings. It is seated on the river Theols, 17 miles SW. of Bourges, and 135 nearly S. of Paris.

IS SUR TILLE, a town in the dept. of Côte d'Or, situated on the river Tille, 9 miles N. of Dijon.

Istwith, a river in Cardigansh. which runs into the Irish sea, at or near Aberystwith. Isting Ebourn, Suffex, NW. of Midhurst. Istrad, a river in Denbighsh. which runs into the Clwyd below Whitchurch.

ISTRIA, a peninsula of Italy, lying on the N. part of the Adriatic, by which it is, in a manner, surrounded, except towards the N. where it is joined to Carniola. It was anciently a part of Illyrium, and was conquered by the Romans, between the first and second Punic wars. In the middle ages it belonged to the patriarch of Aquilea; and in the year 1190, most of the maritime part was conquered by the republic of Venice, though not without interruption from the Austrians. It is hilly, and the air is unhealthy, especially near the coast; but the soil produces plenty of wine, oil, and pastures; there are also quarries of fine marble. That part of it which lately belonged to the Venetians, is now mostly annexed to the house of Austria. Capo d'Istria was the capital.

Istwick, Lancashire, in Amounderness, N. of Kirkham.

ITALY, one of the finest and most celebrated countries of Europe, extending from NW. to SE. nearly 700 miles. On the N. and NW. it is bounded by France, Switzerland, and Germany; on the E. by Carniola and the Adriatic; and on the S. SW. and W. by the Mediterranean; it's figure bearing some resemblance to that of a boot. It was formerly the seat of the Roman empire, and, afterwards, of that more singular usurpation, the dominion of the pope; for this ecclesiastical monarch, under the modest title of minister ministro-rum, servant of servants, claimed a right to dispose not only of the affairs of such nations as acknowledged his supremacy; but but also of pagan lands to the ends of the earth; bestowing them, as an inheritance, on the royal supporters of his church. Italy is divided into a great number of states, which differ much in extent and importance. Between the confines of France and Swisserland, on the W. and N. are the continental dominions of the king of Sardinia, namely, Piedmont, Montferat, and part of the Milanese. To the NE. are the ci-devant territories of Venice, now mostly reduced to the obedience of the emperor. S. of these are the late Italian dominions of the emperor, namely, part of the Milanese, and the Mantuan, now formed into an independent republic, under the protection of France. S. of these are Modena, Mirandola, and Reggio, lately belonging to the duke of Modena, but now incorporated with the new republic. W. of these are the duchies of Parma, Placentia, and Guastalla, whose sovereign is of the house of Bourbon. S. of Parma lies the republic of Genoa, and SE. of this, that of Lucca. Hence extends, along the coast of the Mediterranean, the grand duchy of Tuscany. The Ecclesiastical State, or territory of the Pope, lies principally to the E. and SE. of Tuscany, between the Gulf of Venice and the Mediterranean; and the remainder of Italy, which occupies the whole southern extremity, is the kingdom of Naples, with it's dependant islands, of which Sicily is the principal. The air of Italy is very different, according to the different situations of the countries it contains. In those on the NE. side of the Appenines, it is temperate; but on the SW. it is very warm. The air of the Campania of Rome, and of the Ferrarese, is said to be unwholesome; which is owing to the land not being duly cultivated, nor the marshes drained. That of the other parts is generally pure, dry, and healthy. In summer the heat is very great in the kingdom of Naples, and would be almost intolerable, if it were not alleviated by the sea-breezes. The principal rivers are the Po, Tiber, Arno, Adige, and Var; and there are several fine lakes, as the Maggiore, Lugano, Como, Garda, Perugia, Braccianno, and Celano. As there are a number of rivers in Italy, beside those mentioned above, the soil, in general, is very fertile. It produces a great variety of wines, and the best oil in Europe; excellent silk in abundance; corn of all sorts, but not in such plenty as in other countries; oranges, lemons, citrons, pomegranates, almonds, raisins, sugar, innumerable mulberry-trees, figs, peaches, nectarines, apricots, pears, apples, filberts, chestnuts, &c. Most of these fruits were at first imported by the Romans from Asia Minor, Greece, Africa, and Syria, and were not the natural products of the soil. This country also yields good pasture, and abounds with cattle, sheep, goats, buffaloes, wild boars, mules, and horses. The forests are well stored with game; and the mountains yield, not only mines of iron, alum, sulphur, marble of all sorts, alabaster, jasper, porphyry, &c. but also gold and silver; with a great variety of aromatic herbs, trees, shrubs, and evergreens, as thyme, lavender, laurel, wild olive-trees, tamarinds, junipers, oaks, and pines. Wine, oil, perfumes, fruits, and silks, are the principal articles of exportation; and great sums of money are expended by travellers in the purchase of pictures, curiosities, relics, antiquities, &c. The Italians have been the most celebrated of all the moderns for their genius and taste in architecture, painting, carving, and music, and several of them have also been eminent as writers. The women affect yellow hair, as did formerly their predecessors, the ladies of ancient Rome; they also use paints and washes for their hands and faces. The Italian language is a corruption of the Latin, and is said to be spoken best at Florence.

Itchel, Hants, near Alderiton. Ichben, or Abre, a river of Hants, which rises at Chilton Candover, in the centre of the county, and thence running SW. waters the city of Winchester, where it begins to be navigable; from Winchester it's course is directly S. till it enters the Bay of Southampton, at the town of that name. Itching, or Irtbing, a river of Northumb. and Cumb. falling into the Eden near Warwick. Itching Abbots, Hants, NW. of Alresford. Itching Stoke, Hants, E. of Itching Abbots. Itchington, Gloucestershire, in Titherington parish.

ITCHINGTON BISHOP'S, a town of Warwickshire, so called from the bishops of Lichfield and Coventry, once it's possessors. It is situated on the river Ichene, to the NE. of Kineton. This was anciently one of the chief towns in the county; and, in the reign of Henry II. was ranked with the boroughs that were to contribute to the marriage of that king's daughter. Market on Wednesday.

Itchington, Long and Nether, Warw. near Southam. Itensfield, Cumb. near Inglewood Forest. Itton, a river in Radnorsh. which runs into the Wye, near Disfart, about 3 miles N. of Builth. Itteringham, Norf. NW. of Alesham. Itton, Monmouth. W. of Chepstow.

ITZEHOE, a town of Danish Holstein, built originally by Count Egbert, in pursuance of an order, in the year 809, from the emperor, Charles the Great, as a fortress against the Danes. It is seated on the river Stoer, 8 miles NNE. of Glückstadt.

JUAN DE FRONTERA, St. a town of S. America, in Peru, in the district of Chiquitos. It lies to the E. of the Andes, 98 miles NE. of St. Jago.

JUAN DE PUERTO RICO, St. an island of the W. Indies, 50 miles E. of St. Domingo, and called by the English Porto Rico. It is 100 miles in length, and 50 in breadth, and is subject to the Spaniards. It is full of very high mountains, and extremely fertile valleys, interspersed with woods, and well watered with springs and rivulets. It's meadows are very rich, and there are so many cattle, imported originally from Old Spain, that they often kill them for the sake of the skins alone. The woods are stored with parrots, wild pigeons, and other fowl. European poultry is found here in plenty, and their coasts afford abundance of fish. The N. part of the island, which is the most barren, is said to contain various mines of silver and gold. The principal trade of the natives consists in their sugar, rum, ginger, corn, hides, and cotton, both raw and manufactured, cassia, mastic, salt, oranges, lemons, sweetmeats, and other fruits, partly proper to the climate, and partly introduced from Spain. A breed of dogs, which the Spaniards originally brought over, for the purpose of hunting and tearing in pieces the defenceless inhabitants, are said to live here wild in the woods, near the sea shore, and subsist upon land rats, that burrow in the earth. This island was discovered by Christopher Columbus, in the year 1493. The air is pretty healthy, but it is subject to storms and hurricanes, like the rest of these islands. The capital, of the same name, is seated in the peninsula, on the N. coast of the island, with a good harbour, defended by a citadel and castle. It is populous and well built, the see of a bishop, and residence of a governor. It was founded in the year 1514. In 1594, when it was in a very flourishing state, it was attacked by Sir Francis Drake, who destroyed all the ships in the harbour, but could make no farther progress into the island. In the year 1597, it was taken and plundered by the Earl of Cumberland. Lat. 18. 29. N. lon. 67. 4. W.

JUAN FERNANDEZ, an island in the S. Sea, about 12 miles long and 6 wide. It is 330 miles W. of the coast of Chili, parallel with St. Jago. It is uninhabited, but having a good harbour on the N. coast, called Cumberland Bay, it is found extremely convenient to touchat and water. Lat. 33. 40. S. lon. 83. W.

JUAN DE ULLOA, St. an island in the Gulf of Mexico, half a mile NE. of Vera Cruz.

JUCATAN, or YUCATAN, a large peninsula of Mexico, nearly opposite the W. end of the island of Cuba. It has the Gulf of Honduras to the E. and the Bay of Campeachy to the W. and contains a great quantity of timber, proper for building of ships; as also sugar, cassia, indigo, cotton, and Indian corn. The original inhabitants are very few, they having formerly been very ill used by the Spaniards. It is a flat, level country, and is unhealthy in some parts, which may be owing to the frequent inundations. Merida is the capital; but some give that appellation to the town of Campeachy. See HONDURAS.

JUDENBURG, a town of Stiria, situated on the river Muhr. The public buildings, with the square, are magnificent.

JUDOIGNE, or GELDENACKEN, a town of the late Austrian Brabant, situated on the Geete, 12 miles SSE. of Louvain.

Ive, St. Cornwall, W. of Kellington. Ive Church, Kent, by Romney Marsh. Ivedon, Devonshire, in Aulescomb parish. Iver, Bucks, near Uxbridge.

IVES, St. a sea-port of Cornwall, seated on a bay of the same name, with about 30 ships belonging to it's harbour, 8 miles NE. of Penzance, and 277 W. by S. of London. It trades largely in pilchards and Cornish slates. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

IVES, St. a town of Huntingdonshire, with the largest market in England for cattle, except that of Smithfield. It is an ancient, large, and handsome place, seated on the river Ouse, over which it has a fine stone bridge, 6 miles nearly E. of Huntingdon, and 59 N. of London. Market on Monday.

JUGON, a town in the dept. of the North Coast, containing about 702 inhabitants.

IVICA, an island of the Mediterranean, about 15 miles long, and 12 wide, subject to Spain. It is mountainous, but fertile in corn, wine, and fruits; and remarkable for the great quantity of salt made in it. It is 50 miles SW. of Majorca. The capital is of the same name, seated on a bay, with a good harbour. Lat. 39. 30. N. lon. 1. 25. E.

Iwil, or Iwel, a river in Bedf. which runs into the Ouse at Tomsford. Iwil, a river

IVINGO, a town in Bucks, with a manufacture of lace, 6 miles SW. of Dunstable. Market on Monday.

JUNKSEILON, an island in the Bay of Bengal, near the SW. coast of Siam, nearly 60 miles long, and from 10 to 20 wide. Near the principal town (of the same name, situated in the N. part of the island, with a secure harbour for small vessels) is a mine of loadstone, but the pieces do not preserve their virtue above 4 or 5 months. Lat. 8. 56. N. lon. 98. 30. E.

IVORY COAST, a country of Africa, on the coast of the Atlantic, between Cape Appolonia and Cape Palmas. It contains several towns which are situated at the mouths of rivers, called by the same name. The chief commodities are gold, ivory, and slaves; the former in the greatest plenty. Whatever the Gold Coast produces, is also found here in greater abundance and perfection; and indeed, the fruits and vegetables of the warmer climates seem all to be united on the Ivory Coast. The interior country, however, is but little known, as the natives refuse the Europeans leave to build settlements, or even trade among them, except by means of the coast negroes. The inhabitants are reckoned the most savage and barbarous on the whole coast, and some writers scruple not to call them anthropophagi.

Ivory Lodge, Hants, in New Forest.

JURA, one of the western isles of Scotland, NE. of the island of Islay, on the coast of Argyleshire. It is about 25 miles long, and 7 broad. Some parts of the southern and western sides are fertile, and there are only three mountains on the whole island. These are of a conical form, of a stupendous height, and are called the Paps of Jura. The rest of the island is flat, and generally covered with heath. Shell fish and potatoes form the principal food of the poorer people. A few wild roes are still seen here, but their number is continually growing less.

JURA, a department of France, having Switzerland to the E. the dept. of Saone and Loire to the W. and the Upper Saone on the N. It contains mines of iron of a superior quality, mines of copper and lead, and many quarries of black marble, of jasper of different colours, and of alabaster. It takes its name from Mount Jura. Lons le Saunier is the capital.

JURA, MOUNT, a chain of mountains, which extend, nearly in a line, from the Rhine, near Basil, to the Rhone, 10 miles below Geneva; sometimes more, sometimes less elevated, and in different places taking different names.

IVREA, a town of Canavez, in Piedmont, containing besides the cathedral, 3 parish churches, and several religious houses. It is defended by a castle and two other fortresses, and is situated on the Grand Doria river, 20 miles N. of Turin.

JUTLAND, a large peninsula of Denmark, bounded on the S. by the duchy of Holstein; and on the other sides by the German Ocean and Baltic Sea. It is about 200 miles in length, from N. to S. and 95 in breadth, from E. to W. The air is very cold, but wholesome, and the soil is fertile in corn and pastures, which feed a great number of horses, bees, and hogs, which are sent to Germany, Holland, &c. Hence Jutland is commonly called the land of bacon and rye bread. This was anciently called the Cimbrica Chersonesus; and is supposed to be the country whence the Anglo Saxons came that conquered England. It is divided into two parts, called N. and S. Jutland; the latter being the duchy of Sleiswick. N. Jutland is composed of four general governments, each of which has it's bishop and general governor. They derive their name from the four chief cities, Aalborg, Wiborg, Aarhuys, and Ripen.

Ivy Bridge, Devon. a village remarkable for it's rural and picturesque scenery. It is considerably increased of late in it's buildings, and is seated on the rapid and noisy river Arme, on the road between Exeter and Plymouth, 11 miles NE. of the latter. Ivy Church, Wilts, 2 miles from Salisbury. Ivythorn, Somerset. KALISCH, a palatinate, late of Poland, now of W. Prussia, called also the palatinate of GNESEN, and it's capital, seated on the river Prozna, 57 miles NE. of Breslaw.

KALKA, a country of Asia, bounded on the N. by Russian Siberia; on the E. by Chinese Tartary; on the S. by the Cobi, or Sandy Desert; and on the W. by other parts of Tartary. It is inhabited by the Eluths and Kalmucs.

Kallamer, Lancaf. in Amounderness.

KALMUCS, a nation of Tartars, who inhabit that part of the Russian government of Caucasus, that lies between the river Volga, and the river Yaick (now Ural) toward the Caspian Sea; in all which immense tract there is not a house to be seen, as they all live in tents, and remove from one place to another, in quest of pasturage for their large herds of cattle, consisting of horses, camels, cows, and sheep. They neither sow nor reap, nor make hay for their cattle, so that they live without bread, or any sort of vegetable; and in the winter, their cattle fare as other wild beasts. Their food is flesh, (especially that of horses) fish, wild-fowl, and venison; and they have great plenty of milk, butter, and cheese; but mare's milk is the most esteemed among them, and from it they make a strong spirit, of which they are very fond, and which is clear as water. They are divided into a number of hordes, or clans, each under their own particular khan, and all acknowledging the authority of one principal khan, who is called orchicurtikhan, or king of kings, who derives his pedigree from Tamerlane. All of them, however, have gradually submitted to the government of Russia, or live at present under it's protection. They are pagans. They wear coats of stuff, or silk, above which they wear a large, wide, fur coat of sheepskins, and a cap of the same. Their cattle are large, and their sheep are of the largest kind, having great fat tails, weighing from 25 to 30 pounds; their ears hanging down like our dogs, and, instead of wool, they have soft curled hair, so that their skins are converted into fur coats. Their horses are small, but swift, hardy, and strong; and many of them pace naturally, and trot at an incredible rate. They eat the flesh of camels, cows, and sheep, but universally give the preference to that of the horse. When they go upon any expedition, they have no regard either to bridges or boats; they no sooner come to a river, than in they plunge with their horses, and, sliding from their backs, hold fast by the manes till they get over, and then immediately mount again, and proceed. They live but 4 months at most in the deserts, and inhabit a most pleasant country all the rest of the year (when it is not overflowed) tending their flocks and herds, fishing, and hunting. When they go upon an expedition, every one takes a sheep with him for his provision, and three horses, which he rides alternately; and when any of them fail, they kill it, and divide the flesh, putting pieces of it under their saddles, and, after riding some time upon it, they eat it without any farther preparation. Their kibbets, or tents, are large, and surprisingly warm, having a fire in the middle, and a hole at the top to let out the smoke; they are 24 feet in diameter, and capable of being enlarged or contracted at pleasure; they are all round, the sides being made of a kind of checkered wicker-work, and the cross sticks neatly jointed, for folding together, or extending. The kibbet withstands wind and rain well, and is erected with greater ease and in less time than we could set up an officer's tent. The small-pox is as much dreaded among the Kalmucs as the pestilence among us. When any of them are seized with it, they immediately break up their camp and flee, leaving the sick person in one of their kibbets, or tents, with a killed-sheep, part of which is roasted and part raw, and a jar of water, and some wood for fire; if they recover, they follow the horde, but this seldom happens, for they mostly die for want of attendance. In a more extensive sense, however, the Kalmuc's country includes both the Kalmuc and Mongul Tartars, who both formerly composed but one people. The Mongul Tartars are partly independent, and partly subject to China. See MONGULS.

KALNICK, a town of Bracklaw, in Poland.

KALUGA, a town of Russia, capital of Kalutskoe, a government, formerly included in that of Moscow, of which it lies W. and E. of the government of Smolenskoe; about 140 miles in length, and from 40 to 90 in breadth. Occa is the principal river, on which the town of Kaluga is situated, 390 miles SE. of Petersburg.

KALMUNZ, a town of Newberg, in Bavaria, situated at the conflux of the rivers Nab and Vilz, 12 miles NNW. of Ratibon.

KAMAKURA, an island of Japan, about 3 miles in circumference, on the S. coast of Nippon, used as a state prison. The coast of this island is so sharp, that persons sons and freightage are generally lifted up by cranes.

KAMBALA; MOUNT, a ridge of mountains in Thibet, between the lake Jamdro, and the Sampoo river.

KAMNIECK, a town of Poland, capital of the palatinate of Podolia, which is sometimes also called Kaminieck. A Popish and an Armenian bishop, and a Castellán, reside in this city; and a court of justice, and a provincial diet are, or were, lately, held here. Here is also a college, which formerly belonged to the Jesuits. It has a castle built on a rock, and is one of the best fortified towns in Poland, although it is more beholden to nature than art for its strength. It is situated on the river Smetritz, which falls into the Dniester a little below it, 100 miles W. of Braclaw.

KAMTSCHATKA, a peninsula of Siberia, in the government of Irkutskoi, bounded on the N. by the province of Ochotsk; on the E. and S. by the N. Pacific Ocean; and on the W. by the Sea of Ochotsk and the Penzinskoe Gulf. It is about 600 miles in length, and from 30 to 200 in breadth. The southern extremity is Cape Lopatka, in lat. from 52. to 61. N. and lon. 156. 45. E. according to Capt. King, who visited this country in 1779. A chain of high mountains from N. to S. extends the whole length of the peninsula, and almost equally divides it; whence several rivers take their rise, and empty themselves on both sides into the Pacific Ocean, and the Sea of Ochotsk. Stunted trees are thinly scattered over the whole face of the country, whose bottoms are mossy, with a mixture of low heath; the whole resembling Newfoundland in a most striking degree. This disadvantage of soil, however, is not universal; for some parts produce tolerably good hay. Four months, commencing at midsummer, may be considered as forming their spring, summer, and autumn, the rest of the year is all dreary winter. They have great quantities of wholesome vegetables, in a wild state, such as chervil, garlic, onions, angelica, and wild celery, with some excellent turnips, and turnip-radishes, upon a few spots of ground in the valleys; and this is the utmost extent of their garden cultivation. They have a variety of wild berries, such as blue berries, round and oval, partridge berries, cranberries, crowberries, blackberries, &c. which are gathered at proper seasons, and preserved by boiling them into a thick jam, without sugar. These constitute a considerable part of the winter provisions, serving as a general sauce to their dried and salt fish, of which kind of food they are, unquestionably, excellent correctives. The natives likewise eat them, by themselves, in puddings, and various other ways, and make decoctions of them for their ordinary liquor. Fish is certainly the staple article of food among the inhabitants of this peninsula, who cannot possibly derive any considerable part of their sustenance either from agriculture or cattle; they, however, obtain some from their forests, particularly in the bear, which to hunt and kill, is, with the inhabitants, a skilful and dangerous adventure. The people of Kamtschatka may be said to consist of three sorts; the Kamtschadales, the Russians, and Cossacks, and a mixture produced by their intermarriages. The habitations of the natives consist of three different kinds, which they call jouts, balagans, and loghouses. They inhabit the first in the winter, and the second in the summer; in the third, introduced by the Russians, only the more wealthy people reside. The external appearance of a jout resembles a round, squat hillock; a hole, serving for a chimney, window, and door, is left in the centre, and the inhabitants go in and out by the assistance of a long pole, having notches deep enough to afford a little security for the toe. The upper garment of the Kamtschadales resembles a waggoner's frock; if for summer wear, it is made of nankeen; if intended for winter, it is made of a skin, having one side tanned, and the hair preserved on the other, which is worn innermost; a close jacket of nankeen, or other cotton stuff, is the next under this; and, beneath that, a shirt made of thin Persian silk, of any colour. They wear long breeches and boots, made of skins, with the hair innermost. They have also a fur cap, with two flaps that are usually tied up close to the head, but are let to fall round the shoulders in rough weather. The true Kamtschadales are a people of very remote antiquity, and have for many ages inhabited this peninsula. There are, at present, very few idolaters among them, the Russians having bestowed great pains, and been very successful, in converting them to Christianity. Schools are likewise established in many of the ostrogs, where the children of both the natives and Cossacks are instructed gratuitously in the Russian language. The Russians first discovered the country in the year 1697, and, in 1699, 60 Russian soldiers, with as many Cossacks, penetrated into the heart of the peninsula, levying a tribute of furs in their progress. Their government, considered sidered as a military one; is mild and equitable in a high degree. The natives are permitted to chuse their own magistrates, with all the privileges they had ever enjoyed, who refer to the governor of Kamtschatka such cases only as, from their intricacy or heinousness, they do not chuse to decide upon themselves. Bolcheretsk is the principal place, situated on the SW. coast, in lat. 52. N.

KANDEGHERE, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, 70 miles NW. of Madras. In the year 1599, it was the capital of a kingdom called Narfinga, the residence of a Hindoo king, whose dominions extended over Tanjore and Madura; and in 1640, a descendant of that prince, who reigned here, permitted the English to form a settlement at Madras.

KANEM, a town and province of Bornou, in Africa.

KANOW, a city of Kiow, in Poland, situated on the Dnieper.

KANISCHA, a town of Hungary, 96 miles S. of Vienna.

KANTCHEOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Kiangsi. It's jurisdiction contains 12 cities of the third order, and it's soil produces the trees from which distils a varnish, reckoned the best in China. It is 840 miles S. of Peking.

Kantifs, Essex, near Horndon.

Kanturk, in Cork, Munster.

KAOTCHEOU, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Quangtung. It has within it's jurisdiction one city of the second order, and 5 of the third. In this district are a great number of peacocks, and several sorts of birds of prey. There is also a kind of stone, like marble, which naturally represents landscapes, cascades, &c. of which they make tables, and other curious household furniture. It is situated in a very fruitful country, about 36 miles from the sea, and 1130 SSW. of Peking.

KAPOS, a town of Hungary, situated on a river of the same name, which runs into the Danube, 6 miles from Mohacs.

KAPPAS, OLD, a town of N. America, situated on the W. side of the Mississippi, in lat. 34. 12. N. and lon. 91. 12. W. Near this place, Ferdinand de Soto first discovered the river Mississippi, in the year 1541.

KARAGINSKOI, an island in the N. Pacific Ocean, about 80 miles in circumference. It is situated near the NE. coast of Kamtschatka, in lat. 59. N. and lon. 162. E.

KARECK, an island in the Persian Gulf, lying nearly in the middle of it, where all ships bound for Bufforah must call for pilots. It is about 5 miles long and 2 broad; and is subject to the sheick of Bundaric. The Dutch had a flourishing settlement here, about the middle of the 18th century, formed by the Baron Kniphausen; but on his quitting their service, it became subject again to it's former master.

Karham, Northumb. in Wark barony.

KARICAL, a town of Hindoostan, in the kingdom of Tanjore, containing 14 pagodas, 15 mosques, and about 5000 inhabitants. It was ceded by the king of Tanjore to the French, taken by the English in the year 1760, and retaken in 1779. It is situated on the E. coast, on one of the branches of the Cauvery, 12 miles N. of Negapatam, and 6 S. of Tranquebar.

KARLSRUH, a town of Baden Durlach, in Suabia. The margrave has here a magnificent palace and gardens. The town is built on a regular plan, and the houses are all as uniform as the streets. It is 12 miles N. by E. of Baden.

KAUFFBEUREN, a free town of Suabia.

KAYE'S ISLAND, in the N. Pacific Ocean, near the W. coast of N. America, about 30 miles in length and 4 in breadth, discovered and named by Captain Cook. The SW. point is a naked rock, considerably elevated above the land within it. Pine trees abound in all parts of the island; which indeed is covered, in a manner, with a broad girdle of wood. The trees, however, are far from being of an extraordinary growth; so that they would be of no great service for shipping, excepting as materials for small things. The pine trees appear to be all of one species; and neither the Canadian pine, nor cypress, are found here. Lat. 59. 51. N. lon. 143. 0. W.

KAYSERSBERG, a town in the dept. of Upper Rhine, 5 miles NW. of Colmar.

KAYSER-

KAYERSLAUTERN, a town in the palatinate of the Rhine, seated on the river Lauter, 22 miles SW. of Worms.

KAYERSWERT, a town in the circle of the Lower Rhine, seated on the E. side of the river Rhine, 8 miles N. of Dusseldorf. The fortifications are demolished. It was engaged a long time to the bishoprick of Cologne; but, in 1762, it was restored to the elector palatine.

KAZANSKOE, a large country of the Russian empire, formerly subject to the Kalmuc Tartars, to whom the great duke of Moscow, with the other petty principalities of Russia, were tributary. But Ivan Vasilivitch I. the founder of the Russian greatness, towards the end of the 15th century, rescued his country from the Tartar yoke; and, in 1552, the second duke of the same name, conquered Kasan, which is now divided into the three Russian governments of Kasan, Simbirk, and Penza.

KELSO, a handsome and populous town of Roxburghshire, containing a large market place, it's principal, with 2 small streets, about 376 houses, and 3550 inhabitants. It has some manufactures of flannels, linen, stockings, and shoes. It is governed by a baron bailly, and 15 stent masters, who have authority to levy a stent, stent, or rate, on the inhabitants, for the supply of water, repairing the streets, &c. the former of whom, and 7 of the latter, are appointed by the duke of Roxburgh, who is lord of the manor. The celebrated and magnificent abbey, the ruins of which still remain, was founded by David I. in 1128. The environs of it are very agreeable. From the Chalkheugh is a beautiful view of the forks of the rivers, Roxburgh Hill, Springwood Park, and the Fleurs. From Pinnacle Hill is seen a vast extent of country, highly cultivated, watered by long reaches of the Tweed, and well wooded on each margin. Much wheat is raised in this neighbourhood, and the fleeces of the sheep are remarkably fine. Kelso has a good market for corn, and is situated on the river Tweed, over which it has a handsome bridge of 6 arches, at its conflux with the Tiviot, 20 miles SW. of Berwick, and 42 SSE. of Edinburgh.

KEMAR, a town of Natolia, 8 miles S. of Sinob.

Kemberton, Shrop. SW. of Sheffnal.

Kemble, Wilts. near Malmesbury. Kemblespeth Hill, Cumb. near the source of the Cocker. Kembsborough, Glouce. near Painswick, is a very high hill, that had a castle, the trenches and fortifications of which are still visible. It has a delightful prospect over the vale to Shropshire, Worcestershire, Herefordshire, and Monmouthshire. Kemeys, Monmouth. W. of Wease Wood. Kemeys Commander, Monmouth. NW. of Usk. Kemingham, Norf.

Kemlet, or Camlet, a river in Shropshire.

Kemlet, a river in Denbigh. Kemmerton, Glouc. NE. of Tewkesbury, has a quarry of free-stone, and several petrifying springs.

On Kemmerton Hill is a large camp, of a triangular shape, containing 21 acres.

On being ploughed, a few years since, several Danish implements were found here.

Kempbank, Yorkshire, W. Riding, near Templeborough.

Kempfen, a town of Cologne.

Kempley, Glouce. 4 miles from Ross.

Kempsford, Glouce. between Cricklade and Lechlade; the Stroud Canal is extended to this place. Kempshot, Hants, S. of Basingstoke. Kempston, SW. of Bedford. Kempston, Norf. near Lytcham.

KEMPTEN, a town of Mentz; also an imperial town, and a princely abbey, founded, or repaired and enriched, by Hildegard, wife of Charlemagne, in the 8th century, on the Iler, to which belong several towns and villages; both in Suabia.

Kemphorn, Devon. in Clawton parish.

Kempton, Shrop. near Purslow. Kempton, Herts, anciently called Huckinbanger, NW. of Digswell, near the source of the Kime. Kempcot, Oxf. between Radcot Bridge and Lechlade. Kemsley, Worc. on the E. side of the Severn, below Worcester. Kemsing, Kent, W. of Wrotham. Kemsley Downs, Kent, near Milton. Ken, Somers. between Kingswood and Clevedon. Ken, a river of Devon. that runs into the Ex, below Exeter.

KEN, or KAN, a river of Westmorland, which rises about 3 miles E. of Ambleside, flows by Kendal, and empties itself into the sandy wash of Lancashire, called Morcambe Bay. It has a cataract near its mouth, which renders it incapable of navigation; so that the town of Milthrop, situated on a little creek, near the mouth of the Ken, is the only port of Westmorland; and this is capable of receiving very small vessels only, by which the fine Westmorland slates, hams, and other articles are exported.

KEN, a river of Scotland, which rises in the SW. part of Dumfriesshire, flows, in a southerly direction, by the Dalry, the town of New Galloway, &c. in Kirkcudbrightshire, below which last it expands into a fine lake, about 4 miles in length and 1 in breadth, called Kenmoor Loch. Here it is joined by the river Dec.

Kenagh, in Longford, Leinster.

Kenchester, 3 miles W. of Hereford, on the river Inc. Kensburgh, Heref. Kenscomb, Dorset. SE. of Beminster. Kencot, Oxfordshire, W. of Bampton.

KENDAL, also called KIRBY CANDALE, (that is, a Church in a Valley) a handsome town of Westmorland, the largest in the county, and much superior to Appleby, in trade, wealth, buildings, and population. It has been long noted for its woollen manufactories; particularly knit stockings, a thick stuff, called cottons, for the clothing of the people in the West Indies, and for sailors' jackets, and linsey woolsey. There is likewise a considerable tannery: and fish-hooks, waste silk, and wool-cards are manufactured here. The mills for scouring, fulling, and trizing cloth; and for cutting and raising dying-wood, &c. are well worth seeing. So early as the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV. Kendal was noted for its manufactures, special laws having been enacted in those reigns, for the better regulation of the Kendal cloths; and such has been the spirit and industry of the inhabitants, that they have continued to flourish ever since, notwithstanding the disadvantage of possessing no water-carriage. Kendal is pleasantly seated in a valley, among hills, upon the river Kent, or Kant, over which it has two stone bridges, and one of wood, with a harbour for boats, and communicating, by a canal, with all the late inland navigations, 46 miles S. of Carlisle, and 259 NNW. of London. Market on Saturday.

Kendalshire, Gloucestershire. in Westerleigh parish. Kenelm, Staffordshire. near Clent.

KENELWORTH, or KILLINGWORTH, Warwickshire. SW. of Coventry. It had formerly a castle, encompassed with a chace and park, that was the glory of all this part of England. Here the Earl of Leicester entertained Queen Elizabeth and her whole court, in a most gay and splendid manner, with a great variety and magnificence of feasts and shows, for 17 days consecutive. It was demolished in the civil wars. Market on Wednesday.

Kenford, Devonshire, near Powderham Castle. A great thoroughfare on the Kent. Kenford, Suffolk, near Newmarket. Kengwick, W. of Worcester. Keningal, Norfolk, SE. of E. Harling. Kenley, Shropshire. near Wenlock.

KENMARE, a town of Kerry, in Munster, situated at the mouth of a river of the same name, 12 miles S. of Killarney, and 155 SW. of Dublin.

KENMARE RIVER, on the SW. side of Kerry, in Munster, is about 20-miles long and 3 broad. It affords a safe and capacious harbour, but little frequented.

Kenningington, Kent, near Appledore. Kenne, Devonshire, near Exeter.

KENNEBEC, a river which rises in the NW. part of the province of Maine, in New England; and, flowing in a southerly direction, falls into the Atlantic Ocean, between the Bays of Calco and Penobscot, on the coast of the same province.

Kennedon, Devonshire. in Sherford parish.

Kennegy, Cornwall, near Penzance. Kennerley, Devonshire, near Crediton.

KENNET, a river celebrated by Pope, as, "The Kennet swift, for silver eels renown'd." It rises about 4 miles from Marlborough, in Wilts, passes by Marlborough, Hungerford, &c. to Newbury, in Berks, where it has been made navigable. It joins the Thames, a little below Reading.

Kennet, E. and Little, Wilts. on Marlborough Downs, near the source of the river Kennet. Kennington, a village of Surrey, one of the eight precincts of Lambeth. Near it is an extensive common, noted (till of late) for the execution of malefactors for the county of Surrey. Kennington, Kent, near Ashford. Kennington, Berks, in Radley parish, 1 mile S. of Oxford. Kensley, a small river in Cornwall. Kensington, a village of Middlesex, 2 miles W. of Hyde Park Corner, London. Here is a royal palace, with very extensive gardens, (originally designed by Kent, and much improved, of late, by Browne) which have become a very fashionable promenade for the beau monde. Kensworth, Herts, E. of Studham.

KENT, a county of England, bounded on the W. and SW. by Surrey and Sussex; on the N. by the Thames; on the E. and SE. by the German Ocean and the Straits of Dover; and on the S. by Sussex and the English Channel. From E. to W. it is about 58 miles, and from N. to S. from 30 to 36. It is divided into five lathes, under each of which are several hundreds, which contain 2 cities, 39 market towns, 408 parish churches, 1180 villages, near 40,000 houses, and about 220,000 inhabitants. In the soil and face of the country, there is great diversity. The banks of the Thames are low and marshy, but backed by a range of chalky eminences, sometimes rising to a moderate height. This kind of hard, chalky soil, inclining to barrenness, extends to the NE. extremity of the county, and thence round to Dover, exhibiting its nature in the lofty white cliffs, which here bound the island, and produce that striking appearance at sea which probably gave it the name of Albion. The S. part of Kent, called the Weald, is a flat, woody tract, of a clayey soil; fertile, but unwholesome on account of its moisture. It terminates in the great Marsh of Romney. The midland and western districts are a happy mixture of hill and vale, arable and pasture, equal in pleasantness, and variety of products, to any part of England. This county produces, beside the usual objects of agriculture, large quantities of hops; fruit of various kinds, especially cherries and apples, of which there are large orchards for the London markets; madder for dying; timber in the woody parts; and birch twigs for brooms, which form no inconsiderable article of commerce for the metropolis. The country inland from Dover, consisting chiefly of open downs, is excellent for feeding of sheep; and many bullocks are fattened to an extraordinary size in Romney Marsh. Its manufactures are but trifling. The principal rivers, beside the Thames, are the Medway, Darent, Stour, Cray, and Rother. Maidstone is the county town.

KENT, a county of N. America, in the respective states of Maryland, Delaware, Rhode Island, and Connecticut.

KENTAUFE, MOUNT, a ridge of mountains in the S. of Thibet, bordering on Hindoostan Proper. On the W. side of this ridge are the two heads of the Ganges, and from it's E. side issues the Sanpoo, or Burrampooter.

Kentbridge, Kent, NW. of Rye. Kentbury, Berks, SE. of Hungerford. Kentcomb, Higher and Lower, Dorset. NW. of Great Toller. Kentditch, Suffex, NE. of Rye. Kentes, Essex, SE. of Rochford. Kent Green, Cheshire, E. of Sandbach. Kenthatch, Kent, S. of Westram. Kentishbear, Devon. on the river Culm, E. of Columpton. Kentisbury, Devon. on St. George's Channel, W. of Porlock. Kentish Town, Middlesex, near Hampstead, 3 miles N. of London; much improved of late by a new chapel, and several handsome houses. Kentmere, Westmorl. near Ambleside. The river Ken rises here, about 5 miles N. from the Chapel. Kentmere Hall is an ancient building, with a tower, standing under a vast, craggy mountain, near the chapel, and 12 miles N. from the parish church. Kenton, Middlesex, a mile E. of Harrow on the Hill. Kenton, Middl. NE. of Sunbury. Kenton, Northumb. near Newcastle. Kenton, Devon. near Chudleigh. Kent Sand, Lanc. a bay in the NW. part of the county, which receives the river Ken, but has such dangerous quicksands, that it cannot be crossed, at low water, without the assistance of a guide, who is kept there at the public expence.

KENTSINGUEN, a town of Suabia, in the Brisgau, situated near the E. side of the Rhine, 13 miles NW. of Friburg.

KENTUCKY, a country of N. America, situated in it's central part, near the lat. of 38° 0' N. and 85. 0' W. lon. It is bounded on the N. and NW. by the Ohio, on the E. by Virginia; on the S. by the Tenassee State, including the country of the Upper Cherokees; and on the W. and SW. by the Mississippi and the Cherokee River. It is about 300 miles in length from E. to W. and from 20 to 150 in breadth from N. to S. and is at present divided into 9 counties, 7 of which are Lincoln, Fayette, Bourbon, Mercer, Jefferson, Nelson, and Maddison. The principal rivers are the Ohio, the Kentucky, the Licking River, the Red River, the Elkhorn, Dick's River, Green River, Salt River, Cumberland, and the Great Kenhaway, or New River. These are all navigable for boats almost to their sources, without rapids, for the greatest part of the year. This country is generally level, and abounds with limestone. The springs and streams lessen in June, and continue low, hindering navigation, until November, when the autumnal rains prepare the rivers for boats, and replenish the whole country with water. The soil is amazingly fertile; the inhabitants distinguish it's quality by first, second, and third rate lands; and scarcely any such thing as a marsh or swamp is to be found. This country has a more temperate and healthy climate than the other settled parts of America. The winter is short, and snow seldom falls deep, or lies long. The W. winds often bring storms, and the E. winds clear the sky; but there is no steady rule of weather in that respect, as in the northern states. The W. winds are sometimes cold; but the weather, even then, is not so intensely severe as these winds are in Pennsylvania. The country, in general, may be considered as well timbered, producing large trees of many kinds, and exceeded by no country in variety. Those which are peculiar to Kentucky, are the sugar-maple, which grows in all parts in great plenty, and furnishes every family with plenty of excellent sugar; and the honey-locust, which is curiously surrounded with large thorny spikes, bearing broad and long pods, in form of peas, has a sweet taste, and makes excellent beer. Here are also the coffee-tree, which greatly resembles the black oak, grows large, and also bears a pod, in which is inclosed coffee: the papwa-tree, which does not grow to a great size, is a soft wood, bears a fine fruit; much like a cucumber in shape and size, and tastes sweet; black mulberry-trees in abundance; the wild-cherry-tree, which is of a large size, and supplies the inhabitants with boards for all their buildings; the buck-eye, a very soft wood, wood, bearing a remarkably black fruit; and some other kinds of trees not common elsewhere. Here is great plenty of fine cane, on which the cattle feed, and grow fat: and the cane-brakes are so thick and tall, that it is difficult to pass through them. Where no cane grows, there is abundance of wild rye, clover, and buffalo-grass, covering vast tracts of country, and affording excellent food for cattle. The fields are covered with abundance of wild herbage, not common to other countries. The Shawanese fallad, wild lettuce, pepper-grass, and many more, as yet unknown to the inhabitants, but which, no doubt, have excellent virtues. Here are seen the finest crown-imperials in the world; the cardinal-flower, so much extolled for its scarlet colour; and all the year, excepting the winter months, the plains and valleys are adorned with variety of flowers of the most admirable beauty. Here is also found the tulip-bearing laurel-tree, or magnolia, which has an exquisite smell, and continues to blossom and seed for several months together. Iron ore and lead are found in abundance, but we do not hear of any silver or gold mines. The western waters produce plenty of fish and fowl. The fish, common to the Ohio, are the buffalo-fish, of a large size, and cat-fish, sometimes exceeding one hundred weight. Trout have been taken in Kentucky River, weighing 30 pounds weight. The mullet, rock, perch, gar-fish, and eel, are here in plenty. Suckers, sun-fish, and other hook-fish, are abundant. On these waters, and especially on the Ohio, the geese and ducks are amazingly numerous. The land-fowls are turkeys; a species of grouse, which the inhabitants call pheasants; and quails, to which they give the name of partridges. Here likewise is the parrot, a bird every way resembling a parrot, but much smaller; and the ivory-bill woodcock, of a whitish colour, with a white plume. It flies screaming exceedingly sharp; and it is asserted, that its bill is pure ivory, a circumstance very singular in the plumy tribe. Here also is the great owl, resembling its kind in other parts, but remarkably different in its vociferation, sometimes making a strange, surprising noise, like a man in the most extreme danger and difficulty. Serpents are not numerous, and are such as are to be found in other parts of the continent, except the bull, the horned, and the mock-asin snakes. Among the native animals, is the buffalo, much resembling a large bull, of a great size, with a large head, thick, short, crooked horns, and broader in his forepart than behind. Upon his shoulder is a large lump of flesh, covered with a thick bos of long wool and curly hair, of a dark brown colour. They do not rise from the ground as our cattle, but spring up at once upon their feet; are of a broad make, and clumsy appearance, with short legs, but run fast, and scarcely turn aside for any thing when chased. They weigh from five to ten hundred weight; are excellent meat, supplying the inhabitants, in many parts, with beef, and their hides make good leather. They are innocent, harmless creatures. There are still to be found many deer, elks, and bears. There are also panthers, wild cats, and wolves. The waters have plenty of beavers, otters, minks, and musk-rats; nor are the animals common to other parts wanting, such as foxes, rabbits, squirrels, racoons, ground-hogs, polecats, and opossums. Most of the species of the domestic quadrupeds have been introduced since the settlement; such as horses, cows, sheep, and hogs, which are prodigiously multiplied, suffered to run in the woods without a keeper, and only brought home when wanted. Many caves are found in this country amazingly large; in some of which a person may travel several miles under a fine limestone rock, supported by curious arches and pillars; in most of them runs a stream of water. Kentucky was purchased by the state of Virginia, of the Indians, in 1775, and formed into an independent state in 1792. In 1790, the number of inhabitants was 73,677, and from its rapid increase in population, may now probably be estimated at 200,000. There are many considerable towns, the principal of which are Lexington and Washington.

KENTUCKY, a river of N. America, which rises with three heads, about 18 miles to the NW. of the Laurel Mountains, in the state to which it gives name. One branch, called the North Fork, rises in lat. 37. 5. N. and 82. 40. W.; another, called the South Fork, rises about 45 miles to the W. of the North Fork; and a third branch, called the Middle Fork, rises between the other two. These branches unite together near Franklinville, and the united stream, taking a NW. course, falls into the Ohio, in lat. 38. 35. N. and lon. 85. 30. W. Among the natural curiosities of the country, are the winding banks of this river, and of that called Dick's River. They are rather precipices than banks; for, almost every where, the astonished observer beholds three or four hundred feet of a solid, perpendicular pendicular, limestone rock; in some parts a fine white marble, either curiously arched, pillared, or blocked up into fine building stones. These precipices are like the sides of a deep trench, or canal; the land above being level, except where creeks set in, and crowned with fine groves of red cedar. It is only at particular places that this river can be crossed, one of which is worthy of admiration; a great road, large enough for waggons, made by the buffalo, sloping, with an easy descent, from the top to the bottom of a very large steep hill, at or near the river above Leestown.

Kensvil, Surry, near Woking. Kenward, Suffex, near Cuckfield. Kenwick, Shropf. W. of Wem. Kenwyne, Cornwall, N. of Truro.

KEOWE, a town of S. Carolina, situated on a river of the same name, (which rises in the Nunc Mountains, and empties itself into the river Broad at Petersburg) 53 miles NW. of Petersburg.

Kepeyre, on the Wear, near Durham. Kepik, Northumb. S. of Chollerton.

Keppernham, Hants, near Stockbridge. Keppwick, Yorkf. E. of Northallerton. Kerbrough, Yorkf. SE. of Gisbourn.

KERCOLANG, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, about 20 miles in circumference. The face of the country seems to be steep hills and extensive valleys, and every part to be covered with trees and verdure, with some pleasant cultivated grounds. The houses stand on posts, and appear to be well built, and neatly thatched. Their fishing hooks and lines are mostly European; and the inhabitants are Malays. Their clothing, in general, is made of a coarse kind of calico, though some wear silk; most of them have a kind of turban round their head; and a few have been seen with a Chinese pointed hat. Lat. 4. 28. N. lon. 126. 31. E.

Kergo, Cornwall, W. of Columb.

KERGUELEN'S LAND, an island in the South Pacific Ocean, (first discovered by M. Kerguelen, a Frenchman) visited by Capt. Cook, in 1779, which, from it's sterility, has been called the Island of Desolation. No place hitherto discovered, in either hemisphere, affords so scanty a field for the naturalist as this spot. Some verdure, indeed, appeared when at a small distance from the shore, which might raise the expectation of meeting with a little herbage; but all this lively appearance was occasioned by one small plant, resembling saxifrage, which grew upon the hills in large spreading tufts, in a kind of rotten turf, which, if dried, might serve for fuel, and was the only thing seen here that could possibly be applied to that purpose. A few amphibious animals were discovered. Lat. 49. 20. S. lon. 69. 37. E.

Kering, a river in Denbighshire, which runs into the Dee, between Chirk and Bystock, about 5 miles S. of Wrexham. Kering, a river in Merionethshire, which runs into the Dovy near Llanworing.

KERMAN, a province of Persia, bounded on the N. by Segestan, and a part of Korasan; on the E. by Mecran; on the S. by the Persian Gulf; and on the W. by Farsistan. The northern part is barren, and nearly desert, without rivers or brooks, and the air unhealthy. Towards the S. the air is more pure and the land fertile. The Guebres are numerous, who are chiefly employed in manufactures of stuffs and silk. Here are some mines of copper, lead, and iron; also sheep, which lose their fleeces in spring, and become as naked as sucking pigs; the inhabitants drive a great trade in their wool. Sirgian is the capital.

Kern, Isle of Wight, in E. Medina. Kernbray, or Carnbarrah, Cornw. near the Land's End. Kernbridge, Cornwall, near Kellington. Kerneth, Cornwall, NE. of Tregony. Kenmarge Beacon, Cornwall, SW. of Redruth. Kernsew, Cornwall, NW. of Penryn.

KERPEN, a town, capital of a county of Westphalia, 10 miles ESE. of Juliers.

KERRY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, bounded on the W. by the Atlantic Ocean; on the N. by the river Shannon; on the E. by the counties of Limerick and Cork; and on the S. by a part of Cork and the ocean. It is about 54 miles long, and from 18 to 40 broad. It possesses many fine harbours, and the southern district is plain and fertile, but a large part of it is full of mountains, almost inaccessible, so that little corn is produced, and grazing is more attended to. Considerable quantities of beef, butter, hides, and tallow are exported. It contains 84 parishes, about 19,400 houses, and 107,000 inhabitants. Iron ore is to be had in most of the southern baronies, and here are several spas, or medicinal springs. The principal rivers are the Blackwater, Feal, Gale and Brick, Cash in Mang, Lea, Fleck, Laune, Carrin, Farthin, Finny, and Roughty. The county town is Tralee.

Kersal, Nottinghamshire, near Bestthorp.

KERSHAW, a county of S. Carolina.

Kerwent, Monm. 5 miles from Chepstow, where a Roman tessellated pavement, in high preservation, is inclosed with walls, to prevent injury to it. The colours are incomparably brilliant. Kery, a river in Cardiganshire, which runs into the Tivy at Kilgwyn, about 7 miles above Cardigan. Kerstall, Yorkf. NW. of Leeds. Kesgrave, Suffolk, between Woodbridge and Ipswich.

KESROAN, a chain of mountains in Asia, on the coast of Syria, which makes a part of Mount Libanus. It is one of the most pleasant and fertile countries in the East.

KESSEL, a town of Prussian Guelderland, with a castle, seated on the W. side of the river Maese, 7 miles N. of Ruremond.

KESSEL SEE, a lake of Carinthia.

KESSELDORF, a town of Meissen, in Upper Saxony, 7 miles W. of Dresden.

Kessilgum, a river in Merionethshire, which runs into the Avon below Kimner Abbey, about 2 miles below Dolgelly. Kessingland, Suffolk, near Benacre.

KESTEVEN, one of the three divisions of Lincolnshire, containing the western part of the county, from the middle to the southern extremity. It possesses variety of soil; but, on the whole, though intermixed with large heaths, is a fertile country. Part of the fens of Lincolnshire are in this district; the air of which, however, is more salubrious than that of the district of Holland; and the soil, moreover, is more fruitful.

Kestle, Cornwall, near Helford Haven. Kelson, Huntingd. NW. of Kimbolton. Keston, Kent, 5 miles from Bromley, and 14 from London. At Holwood Hill, in this parish, are the remains of a large and strong fortification, probably a Roman one, of an oblong form; the area of which is partly inclosed with rampires and double ditches, of a great height and depth. It is near 2 miles in circumference, and incloses near 100 acres of ground. A path descends from the camp to the spring head of the river Ravensbourn. This river flows hence through Bromley and Hayes to Beckenham and Lewisham, and crossing the great road at Deptford Bridge, falls into the Thames a little below. Keswell, Cornw. near Padstow Haven. Kell, Abbots and Kings, Devorsh. E and SE. of Ashburton.

KESWICK*, a small but neat and well-built town of Cumberland, consisting of one long street. It has considerable manufactures of woollen stuffs, flannels, duffels, &c. and is pleasantly seated in a beautiful and extensive vale, surrounded by hills, through which flows the Derwent, 25 miles NW. by N. of Kendal, and 237 NNW of London. Market on Saturday.

KESWICK, VALE OF, a romantic spot, in the southern part of Cumberland, lately much visited by the admirers of beautiful scenes in nature. Here is the Lake of Keswick, or more properly, the Lake of Derwent Water. To the N. of this romantic piece of water, soars the lofty mountain Skiddaw, near the foot of which is Basingthwaite Water. To the S. are the craggy hills of Borrowdale, where the eagles build their nests, and whence the Derwent derives it's supplies of water. See BORROWDALE, BASINGTHWAITE, DERWENT WATER, and SKIDDAW.

Keswick, SW. of Norwich. Keswick, Yorkf. SW. of Wetherby. Kesworth, Dorsetshire, near Wareham. Ket's Coity House, Kent, near Aylesford. Ketheringham, Norfolk, near Windham. Ketterickswart, Yorkf. N. Riding, near Catterick Bridge.

KETTERING*, a handsome, populous, trading town, in Northamptonshire, with manufactures of lace, shalloons, serges, tammies, &c. in which near 2000 hands are said to be employed. It has a sessions house for the county, and is seated on a river that runs into the Nen, 12 miles NE. of Northampton, and 75 NW. of London. Market on Friday.

Kettlebaston, Suffolk, on the river Breton, near Bilston. This manor is held by the service of carrying a golden sceptre, with a dove on it, at the king's coronation, and an ivory sceptre, with a golden dove, at the coronation of the queen. Kettleborough, Suffolk, S. of Framlingham. Kettleby, Linc. W. of Alford, near Glandford Bridge. Kettlesdale Spring, Yorkf. W. Riding, near Kirby Lonsdale. Kettlesmed, Yorkf. NW. of Rippon. Kettlesmere, Yorkf. SW. of Masham. Kettleston, Norfolk, between Fakenham and Holt. Kettlethorp, near the Fosdyke, NW. of Lincoln. Kettleswell, Yorkf. W. Riding, lies under a hill, between Langshethdale Chase and Netherdale. Ketton, Durh. on the Skern, N. of Darlington. Ketton, Linc. 2 miles from Stamford. Ketton, Rutland, on a rivulet that runs into the Welland, near Tinewell. A certain rent is collected here, annually, from the inhabitants, of 2s. pro ocreis reginae, i. e. for the queen's boots, though we do not read of any who ever wore them. Its church is remarkably neat, having the form of a little cathedral. Kewenny, or Govenney, a river in Monmouthshire, which runs into the Usk at Abergavenny. Kewenny, a river in in Anglesey, which issues from the high hills N. of Cwydara, and runs into the Irish Channel, on the SW. side of the island, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. of Newburgh. Ke-verdale, Lanc. E. of the Ribble, opposite to Preston. Kewerel, Cornw., near St. Germain's. Kewern, St. Cornw. on the SW. side of Falmouth Haven. Kewernal, 5 miles S. of Hereford. Kevil, Wilts, E. of Trowbridge. Kewington, Kent, in St. Mary Cray parish. Kew, a village of Surrey, on the banks of the Thames, opposite to Old Brentford, and about 7 miles W. by S. of London. On it's green is Kew House, a royal palace, celebrated for it's fine gardens, and the king's exotic garden. The last has been brought to great perfection by the introduction of many new plants from Africa and New South Wales; and is known throughout all Europe, by the late Mr. Aiton's Hortus Kewensis. The palace was formerly the seat of Mr. Molineux, secretary to the late king (George II.) when prince of Wales, but afterwards became the residence of the late prince and princess of Wales, who greatly improved both the house and gardens. His present majesty, also, has considerably enlarged the gardens, and formed a junction with them and Richmond gardens. From Kew to Brentford is a very elegant stone bridge, of 7 arches, over the Thames, built in 1789, from a design of the late Mr. Paine. Kewe, St. Cornw. near Penzance. Kewe, St. Cornw. between Camelford and Padstow Haven. Kewstock, Somers. on the Bristol Channel, between Uphill and Woodspring. Kexby, Linc. on the Trent, SE. of Gainborough. Kexby, E. of York, near the Derwent.

KEXHOLM, a town of the Russian empire, in the government of Wiburg, seated on two small islands of the river Woxen, which here falls into the Lake Ladoga. The houses are built with wood; it is not very large, but near it is a considerable salmon fishery. It is 67 miles N. of Peterburgh. Lat. $61. 3.$ N. lon. $30. 25.$ E. Key, Cornw. at the head of Falmouth Haven. Keynele, Wilts, near Castlecomb. Keynsham, Gloucef. in Woollaston parish.

KEYNSHAM, (proverbially called SMOXY, i. e. foggy) a town of Somersetshire, the chief trade of which is malting. In the neighbourhood is a quarry, where stones are often found of a serpentine form, but without the representation of a head. Every year, in the spring, the river here swarms with millions of little eels, scarcely as big as goose quills, which the inhabitants catch, on the top of the water, with small nets, and scowering off their skins, by an art which they have, make them into cakes, (reckoned here a dainty) which they fry and eat. It is a great thoroughfare, on the lower road, between Bath and Bristol, and is seated on the river Avon, over which it has a bridge of 15 arches, (and another bridge over the Chew) 5 miles SE. of Bristol and 115 W. of London. Market on Thursday.

Keynton, Shropsh. NW. of Newport. Keynton, Little, Dorsetf. in Stower Westover parish. Keynton, St. Michael's, Wilts, E. of Castlecomb. Keynton, West, Wilts, W. of Castlecomb. Keyworth, SE. of Nottingham. Keyworth, Dorsetf. 2 miles NE. of Wareham.

KHARKOF, a government of the Russian empire, bounded on the N. by Kursk, on the E. by Voronetz, and on the S. by Ekaterinossav. It's capital, of the same name, is seated on the river Uda, which falls into the river Donetz, 352 miles S. of Moscow.

KAERSON, or CHERSON. See CHERSON.

KIAKING, a city of China, of the first rank, in the province of Tchekiang. Canals are cut through all parts of the city, and in all the streets there are piazzas, to walk under, free from rain. There are many triumphal arches, both within and without the city, and 15 marble towers, on the sides of the canal, by which all the barks pass. There is scarcely a house where they do not breed silkworms. It is 590 miles SSE. of Pekin.

KIANG MAN, a province of China, bounded on the N. by Chantong; on the E. by the Gulf of Nanquin; on the S. by Tchekiang and Kiang-Si; and on the W. by Honan and Hon-Quang. It contains 14 cities of the first rank, and 93 of the second and third, which are very populous, and of the greatest note for trade in the empire. It is the rendezvous of all the great barks, being full of lakes, rivers, and canals; and their silks, japanned goods, ink, and paper, are in high esteem. In the city of Changhi only, there are 200,000 weavers of plain cottons and muslins. Nanking in the capital.

KIANG-SI, a province of China, bounded on the N. by Kiang-Nan; on the S. by Quantong; on the W. by Hon-Quang; and on the E. by Fokien and Tchekiang. The mountains, with which the province is surrounded, are either covered with wood, or famous for their minerals, simples, and medicinal plants. It's soil is very rich and fertile, being well watered by brooks, lakes, and rivers, which abound with fish; and there are mines of gold, silver, lead, iron, and tin. The rice and arrack here are excellent; but it is more particularly noted for its fine porcelain, which is made at Kiang-Teching.

KIANGTCHOU, a city of China, of the second rank, in the province of Chanfi. It is 300 miles SW. of Peking.

Kibberd, Cornwall, SW. of Columb. Kibbleworth, Durham, in Lamsley parish.

KIDDERMINSTER, a town of Worcestershire, the principal manufacturing place in the county, and long celebrated for its different manufactures of woollens, carpets, poplins, crapes, bombazeens, &c. The inhabitants are about 5800. Its former trade of stuffs, however, is much declined, on account of the general use of cotton goods; but its carpet manufactory has greatly increased; and it is still the first market in England for pile, or plush carpets, which, for beauty of colour and patterns, exceed any other. These are frequently called Wilton, from having been first made at that town; but, at present, by much the greater part are made at Kidderminster. The silk and worsted trades have also been introduced here and employ about 2000 hands. The goods go chiefly to Portugal, and their carriage has been much facilitated by the late canal communications. It is seated under a hill, on the river Stour, 14 miles SE. of Bridgenorth, and 125 NW. of London. Market on Thursday.

Kiddestey Park, Derbf. S. of Alfreton. Kiddington, Cheshire, near Malpas. Kiddington, Oxford. 4 miles from Woodstock, on the river Glym, which divides the parish in two parts. The chancel of its church is in the Saxon or Norman style, with a zig-zag arch behind the altar. In the garden of the manor house, is an antique font, brought from Edward the Confessor's chapel, at Islip, and wherein, as some say, he received baptism. In Hill Wood, near this place, is a Roman encampment, in extraordinary preservation, but little noticed. Kiderew, Staff. near Talk.

KIDWELLY, a town of Carmarthen-shire, noted formerly for the clothing trade. Here is a castle, the very large remains of which, extremely well preserved, shew it to have been very stately and magnificent. A canal has been cut from hence to some collieries at Pwyllogod, about 4 miles distant, whence coal is brought down and exported. It is situated on the Gwandrath Vach, a branch of the Towy, which empties itself into that river, at its efflux into the Bristol Channel, 9 miles S. of Carmarthen, and 224 W. by N. of London. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs on May 24, July 22, and October 29.

KIEL, a rich and considerable town of Germany, capital of Russian Holstein, containing a university, a college or gymnasium, 3 churches, and about 800 houses. It stands upon a small peninsula, in a bay of the Baltic, and has a very commodious harbour for ships of the largest size. It is already one of the most commercial places in Holstein; and its trade will be still further augmented, as the inland navigation across the peninsula is now finished. By this navigation it is proposed to unite the Northern Sea with the Baltic; and it has been formed across Danish Holstein by the Canal of Kiel, and the river Eyder, which passes by Rendsburgh, and falls into the German Ocean at Tonningen. This canal was begun in 1777, and has been lately finished, and opened for navigation. Kiel is 46 miles N. of Hamburg.

KIGHLEY, a town in the W. Riding of Yorkshire, seated in a valley surrounded by hills, at the meeting of two brooks, which fall into the river Aire, a mile below. It communicates with all the late inland navigations, and is 6 miles SE. of Skipton, in Craven.

KILCULLEN, a town of Kildare, in Leinster, seated on the river Liffey, 21 miles SW. of Dublin, on the great road between that city and Cork.

Kilcumner, in Cork, Munster. Kilcummen, in King's County, Leinster.

KILDA, St. a small island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, about 11 leagues W. of North Uist. The inhabitants live chiefly by fishing and catching wild fowls. In the latter employment, they are amazingly adventurous, being let down by a rope from the summit of high, precipitous rocks, where they clamber among the rugged cliffs, in search of the eggs and nests of various birds. But the more safe and common method of catching these fowls is, by spreading a large net over the face of the rock, where they lodge, in which great numbers are at once entangled, and lowered down into a boat. St. Kilda is the most westerly island of Great Britain. Lat. 55. 48. N. lon. 8. 18. W.

Kildale, Yorks. E. of Stokesley.

Kildangan, in Kildare, Leinster.

KILDARE, a town of Leinster, capital of a county of the same name. It is chiefly supported by frequent horse races, on what is called the Curragh, (a fine plain, containing upwards of 3000 acres) and is 27 miles SW. of Dublin.

KILDARE, a county in the province of Leinster, 33 miles in length, and from 12 to 21 in breadth. It is bounded on the W. by King and Queen's County; on the N. by Meath; on the E. by Dublin and Wicklow; and on the S. by Carlow. It contains 11,200 houses, and about 56,000 inhabitants, and is a fine, arable, fertile country, well watered by the Barrow, Liffey, Boyne, and other rivers.

KILHAM, a town in the E. Riding of Yorkshire, in the Wolds. It is about 4 furlongs in length, and stands in a good soil for corn, 28 miles N. of Hull, and 200 N. of London. Market on Thursday.

Kilholm, Yorkshire, on the river Torre, near Doncaster Heath.

KILIA, a town of Bessarabia, at the mouth of the river Danube, situated in an island formed by it, 20 miles ENE. of Ismael, and 290 NE. of Constantinople.

Kilkeele, in Down, Ulster. Kilkelly, in Roscommon, Connaught:

KILKENNY, a populous, trading town of Ireland, capital of a county of the same name. It has a small cathedral, is one of the neatest towns in the kingdom, and contains about 17,000 inhabitants. The borough of St. Canice, or Irish Town, is joined to English Town, which is the principal, and, both together, form one large town. The manufactures chiefly carried on here, are coarse woollen cloths, blankets of extraordinary fine quality, and considerable quantities of starch. The houses are decorated with a beautiful black and white marble, dug from quarries near the town, and which is cut and polished by water. It is seated on the river Nore, over which it has two handsome bridges, 26 miles N. of Waterford, 65 NE. of Cork, and 54 SW. of Dublin. Lat. 52. 36. N. lon. 7. 18. W.

KILKENNY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, 35 miles in length and 18 in breadth. It is bounded on the W. by Tipperary, on the N. by Queen's County; on the E. by Carlow and Wexford; and on the S. by Waterford. It contains 127 parishes, about 17,750 houses, and near 100,000 inhabitants. The surface is generally level, and the soil fertile, and, being proper for tillage, produces corn, wool, marble, and a species of coal, which, like charcoal, burns without smoke. The country abounds with fine plantations, and is, from the purity of the air, esteemed extremely healthful. The principal rivers are the Barrow, which bounds it on the E. the Suir, which forms it's southern boundary, and the Nore, which crosses it from N. to S.

Kilhampton, Cornwall, near Hartland Point, 3 miles N. of Stratton.

Kill, in Dublin, Leinster, 5 miles from the metropolis. Kill, in Kildare, Leinster. Killacounty, in Cork, Munster. Killagh, in Kerry, Munster.

KILLALOE*, a city of Clare, in Munster, seated on the river Shannon, over which it has a bridge of 19 arches, 10 miles N. of Limerick, and 86 SW. of Dublin. Here is a considerable salmon and eel fishery.

Killam, Northumb. S. of Brankeston.

KILLARNEY*, a town of Kerry, in Munster, situated on the side of the lake of the same name, 36 miles W. of Cork, 50 SW. of Limerick, and 143 SW. of Dublin. Within half a mile of this place are the ruins of the cathedral of Aghadoe, an ancient bishoprick united to Ardferit.

KILLARNEY, a beautiful lake of Kerry, in Munster, otherwise called Lough Lean, from it's being surrounded by high mountains. It is properly divided into three parts, called the Lower, Middle, and Upper Lakes. The northern, or lower lake, is about 6 miles in length, and from 3 to 4 in breadth. The country on this and the eastern boundary, is here and there diversified with gentle swells, many of which afford beautiful prospects of the lake, the islands, and surrounding scenery. The S. shore is composed of immense mountains, rising abruptly from the water, and covered with woods of the finest timber. From the centre of the lake, the view of this range is astonishingly sublime, presenting to the eye an extent of forest 6 miles in length, and from half a mile to a mile in breadth; hanging as a robe of rich luxuriance on the sides of two mountains, whose bare tops, rising above the whole, form a perfect contrast to the verdure of the lower region. On the side of one of these mountains is O'Sullivan's Cascade, which falls into the lake with a roar that strikes the timid with awe. The view of this sheet of water is uncommonly fine, appearing as if it were descending from an arch of wood, which overhangs it above 70 feet in height from the point of view.

Coasting along this shore affords an almost endless entertainment, every change of position, presenting a new scene; the rocks hollowed and worn into a variety of forms by the waves, and the trees and shrubs bursting from the pores of the sapless stone, forced to assume the most uncouth shapes, to adapt themselves to their fantastic situations. The islands are not so numerous in this as in the upper lake; but there is one of uncommon beauty, namely, Innisfallen, nearly opposite O'Sullivan's Cascade. It contains 18 Irish acres. The coast is formed into a variety of bays and promontories, skirted and crowned with arbutus, holly, and other shrubs and trees. The interior parts are diversified with hills and dales, and gentle declivities, on which every tree and shrub appears to advantage: the soil is rich, even to exuberance; and trees of the largest size incline across the vales, forming natural arches, with ivy intertwining in the branches, and hanging in festoons of foliage. The promontory of Mucrus, which divides the upper from the lower lake, is a perfect land of enchantment; and a road is carried through the centre of it, which unfolds all the interior beauties of the place. Among the distant mountains, Turk appears an object of magnificence; and Mangerton's more lofty, though less interesting summit, soars above the whole. The passage to the upper lake is round the extremity of Mucrus, which confines it on one side, and the approaching mountains on the other. Here is that celebrated rock, called The Eagle's Nest, which produces wonderful echoes. A French horn sounded here, raises a concert superior to 100 instruments, in some situations; and the report of a single cannon is answered by a succession of peals resembling the loudest thunder, which seems to travel the surrounding scenery, and die away among the distant mountains. The upper lake is about 4 miles in length, and from 2 to 3 in breadth; it is almost surrounded by mountains, from which descend a number of beautiful cascades. The islands in this lake are numerous, and afford an amazing variety of picturesque views. The centre lake, which communicates with the upper, is small in comparison with the other two, and does not shew an equal variety. The shores, however, are, in many places, indented with beautiful bays, surrounded with dark groves of trees, some of which have a very picturesque appearance, when viewed from the water. The eastern boundary is formed by the base of Mangerton, down the steep side of which descends seends a cascade, visible for 150 yards. This fall of water is supplied by a circular lake near the summit of the mountain, called the Devil's Punch Bowl; which, on account of its immense depth, and continual overflow of water, is considered as one of the greatest curiosities in Killarney. One of the best prospects which this admired lake affords, is from a rising ground near the ruined cathedral of Aghadoge. In the several mountains adjacent to the lakes, vestiges of ancient mines of iron, lead, and copper, are still to be seen.

Killashbee, in Longford, Leinster. Killbarmedan, in Waterford, Munster. Killbarrack, in Dublin, Leinster, 5 miles from the metropolis. Killberry, in Meath, Leinster.

Killiter, in Tyrone, Ulster.

KILLEVAN, a town of Monaghan, in Ulster, 8 miles SW. of the town of Monaghan.

Killiboy, in Kilkenny, Leinster.

KILLICRANKIE, a noted pass of Perthshire, near the junction of the Tummel with the Garry. It is the grand entrance into the Highlands in those parts, and is formed by the lofty mountains impending over the Garry, which rushes through in a deep, darksome, and rocky channel, overhung with trees, forming a scene of horrible grandeur. In the last century, this was a pass of much difficulty and danger: a path hanging over a tremendous precipice threatened destruction to the least false step of the traveller. At present, a fine road, formed by the soldiery lent by government, gives an easy access to the remote Highlands; and the two sides are joined by a fine arch.

Killigordon, in Donegal, Ulster.

Killinick, in Wexford, Leinster.

Killiew, Cornwall, N. of Tregony.

Killmacabea, in Cork, Munster. Killmacduagh, in Galway, Connaught, 2 miles W. of Gort. The walls of a cathedral, the ruins of a monastery, and of several chapels, with a large round tower, of very ancient and rude masonry, denote the pristine consequence of this now wretched village. Killmaclege, Killmacombe, Killmeaden, and Killmolasb, all in Waterford, Munster.

KILLMAURS, a town of Ayrshire, 4 miles ENE. of Irvine.

Killoges, in Mayo, Connaught. Killo-teran, in Waterford, Munster.

KILLOUGH, or PORT ST. ANNE, a town of Down, in Ulster, 76 miles N. by E. of Dublin. It lies N. of St. John's Point, and has a good quay, from which considerable quantities of barley are exported. Here is a profitable manufacture of salt. At a small distance from the town, near the sea, is a rock, in which there is an oblong hole, whence a strange noise is heard, at the ebbing and flowing of the tide, somewhat resembling the sound of a huntsman's horn. At the coming in of the tide, whilst the waters are beating up under the rock, a cold air bursts from it with a mixture of spray; but as the waters retire during the ebb, there is a strong draft of air sets in at the hole, to fill up or prevent the vacuum which the retiring of the water would produce. In an open field, about a quarter of a mile from the town, there is a very curious cave, about 27 yards long, which has a winding passage, two feet and a half broad, with with 3 doors in it, besides the entrance, leading to a circular chamber, 3 yards in diameter, where there is a fine, cool, limpid well.

Killovo, in Derry, Ulster. Killowen Point, an excellent natural harbour, about 2 miles S. of Restrevor, in Down, Ulster. Kill, St. Nicholas, in Waterford, Munster, between the city of Waterford and the sea.

Kilmaganny, in Kilkenny, Leinster. Kilmain, in Mayo, Connaught.

KILMAINHAM, a decayed sort of town, situated on the W. extremity of the city of Dublin, in a pretty little valley, on the great western road. It was some time the seat of government, before the castle at Dublin was appropriated to that purpose. A stream of water runs in the bottom, which carries some mills, and on which there are several tan yards. On the hill on one side, stands the Royal Hospital of Invalids, an elegant building; and, on the opposite hill, the Foundling Hospital. The quarter-sessions for the county of Dublin, and the election for the knights of the shire, are held here.

KILMALLOCK, a once celebrated, but now decayed, town of Limerick, in Munster. From it's many and extensive ruins, it has obtained the name of the Irish Balbeck. About two centuries ago, it appears to have been one of the best built inland towns in the kingdom; the walls of many large houses, of stone and excellent workmanship, with the ruins of churches and monasteries, walls and gates, remain to this day, to testify it's former splendor. It is 16 miles S. of Limerick, and 107 SW. of Dublin.

Kilmanbridge, Surry, in Charlewood parish, is so called from a great slaughter, made of the Danish plunderers, by the inhabitants of this county and Suffex.

KILMARNOCK, a town of Ayrshire, containing about 5670 inhabitants. It is noted for it's manufactures of gloves, carpets, stockings, night-caps, bonnets, and other woollen goods, and is 15 miles SW. of Glasgow.

Kilmarr Rock, Cornwall, on a very high hill, N. of Lelkard, has at a distance the appearance of a city, though it be only a covert for foxes. Kilmarsh, Yorkshire, near Sheffield.

Kilmatague, in Sligo, Connaught. Kilmeague, in Kildare, Leinster. Kilmeashbill, in Wexford, Leinster. Kilmelchedor, in Kerry, Munster.

Kilmerston, Somers. NW. of Frome.

Kilmiddy, in Limerick, Munster.

Kilmington, Devon. near Axminster, is a corruption for Kill Men Town, from the great slaughter made in the neighbouring field, to this day called King's Field, where King Athelstan fought and defeated seven Danish princes.

KING GEORGE'S ISLANDS, 2 islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Commodore Byron, in 1765, and visited by Capt. Cook, in 1773. The larger is about 27 miles in circumference, low, and bordered by a coral rock. Lat. 14. 41. N. lon. 149. 15. W.

KING GEORGE'S SOUND, the name given by Captain Cook, in 1778, to the harbour which he discovered on the W. coast of N. America, at the mouth of a great river, in lon. 126. 48. W. and lat. 49. 33. N. But the natives called it Nootka; the name now generally adopted by the English. Upon the sea-coast, the land is tolerably high and level; but within the Sound, it rises into steep hills, which have a uniform appearance. The trees, of which the woods are composed, are the Canadian pine, white cypress, and two or three other sorts of pine. In general, the trees grow here with great vigour, and are of a large size. About the rocks and borders of the woods, were seen some strawberry plants and raspberry, currants, and gooseberry bushes, all in a flourishing state. The principal animals seen here were racoons, martens, and squirrels. Birds are far from being numerous, and those that are to be seen are remarkably shy, owing, perhaps, to their being continually harassed by the natives, who take them for food, and use their feathers as ornaments. The variety of fish is not very great here, yet they are in greater quantities than birds. The principal sorts are the common herring, a silver-coloured bream, and another of a brown colour. The stature of the natives is, in general, below the common standard; but their persons are not proportionably slender, being usually pretty plump, though not muscular. The women are, in general, of the same size and proportion as the men. Their bodies are always covered with red paint, but their faces are ornamented with a variety of colours, a black, a bright red, or a white colour; the last of which gives them a ghastly and horrible appearance. They appear to be docile, courteous, and good-natured; but they are quick in resenting injuries, and as quickly forget them. A rattle and a small whistle are the only instruments of music that were seen among them. Their houses consist of very long, broad planks, resting upon the edges of each other, tied in different parts, with withes of pine bark. Their furniture consists principally of chests and boxes of various sizes, piled upon each other, at the sides or ends of their houses, in which are deposited their garments, and whatever they deem valuable. They have also square and oblong pails, and bowls to eat their food out of, &c. From their curing their fish in their houses, and leaving the bones and fragments in heaps of filth before the doors, and from their houses being without chimneys, their habitations have a strong, disagreeable smell of train-oil, fish, and smoke.

KISMISH, a fertile island in the Gulf of Persia, W. of Ormus. It is about 50 miles in circumference, and is remarkable for it's pearl fishery.

KISTI, one of the seven Caucasian nations, that inhabit the countries between the Black Sea and the Caspian. They consist of 16 different districts, or tribes, which are often at variance with each other, and with their neighbours. Their dialects appear to have no analogy with any known language, and their history and origin are utterly unknown. Those belonging to the districts of Wapi, Angusht, and Shalkha, submitted to Russia in 1770. The Thetshen tribe is so numerous and warlike, and has given the Russians so much trouble, that it's name is usually given by them to the whole Kisti nation. The Ingush live in villages near each other, containing about 20 or 30 houses: they are diligent husbandmen, and rich in cattle. Many of their villages have a stone tower, which serves, in time of war, as a retreat to their women and children, and a magazine for their effects. These people are all armed, and have the custom of wearing shields. Their religion is very simple, but has some traces of Christianity. They believe in one God, whom they call Dailé, and, on the first day of the week, rest from labour. They eat pork, and have a fast in spring, and another in summer. They observe no ceremonies either at births or deaths; but they allow of polygamy, and, at certain times, a sheep is sacrificed by a person who seems to be considered as a kind of priest, as he is obliged to live in a state of celibacy. A singular sort of hospitality is attributed to these people by Major Rennel. "When a guest, or stranger, comes to lodge with them, one of the host's daughters is obliged to receive him, to unsaddle and feed his horse, take care of his baggage, prepare his dinner, pass the night with him, and continue at his disposal during his stay."

KOEI-TACHEOU, a province of China, one of the smallest in that empire, and full of inaccessible mountains. It is inhabited by a people who are independent, and who would never submit to the laws of the empire. However, the emperor has found means to build forts therein, and garrison some of the towns; but all the taxes they can raise here will not defray the expence. This province is remarkable for it's copper mines, and, between the mountains, there are several fruitful valleys. They have neither silk nor cotton, and therefore they make their cloth of a sort of grass, like hemp. Their cows, stags, and wild hens are numerous, and the horses are the best in China.

KOLA, a town of the Russian government of Archangel, and the capital of Russian Lapland. It has a good harbour on the river Kola, near the bay of the same name in the Frozen Ocean, where is a considerable fishery for whales, sea-dogs, and other fish, which the inhabitants cure for sale. Lat. 68. 34. N. lon. 32. 26. E.

KONINGSBERG, the capital of the kingdom of Prussia, with a university, and a magnificent palace, in which is a hall 274 feet long, and 59 broad, without pillars to support it, and a handsome library. The town house, the exchange, and the cathedral, are fine structures. The tower of the castle is very high, and has 284 steps to the top, whence there is an extensive prospect. There are 18 churches in all, of which 14 are Lutherans, 3 Calvinists, and 1 is Romish. The number of houses is about 3800. The town is about 7 English miles in circumference, and, including the garrison of 7000 men, contains 60,000 inhabitants. It stands on the Pregel, a navigable river, which here falls into the eastern extremity of the Frische

Mas, an inlet of the Baltic. No ships drawing more than 7 feet water can pass the bar, and come up to the town; so that the large vessels anchor at Pillau, a small town on the Baltic, which is the port of Konigsberg; and the merchandise is sent up in smaller vessels. The trade of Konigsberg is very considerable. It is 125 miles N. of Warsaw. Lat. 54. 42. N. lon. 20. 48. E.

KOPYL, a town of Novogrodeck, in Lithuania.

KORIAES, a nation on the borders of Kamtschatka, tributary to the Russians. There are two sorts of Koriacs. Those who are properly called by that name have a fixed residence: the others are wanderers, and are known by the appellation of Rein-deer Koriacs. Their flocks are very numerous, and they maintain them by conducting them to those cantons that abound with moss. When these pastures are exhausted, they seek for others. In this manner they wander about incessantly, encamping under tents of skin, and supporting themselves with the produce of their deer, which are as serviceable for draught to the Koriacs, as the dogs are to the Kamtschadales. Their country is terminated to the S. by the peninsula of Kamtschatka, and the Gulf of Peking; to the E. by the Ocean; to the N. by the country of the Tehoukchis; and to the W. by the Tonguses, the Lamouts, and the Yakouts. It is confidently asserted, that this country was formerly very populous, and that the small pox had made very considerable ravages; but it is doubted whether that disease has carried off more of the inhabitants than their frequent contests with their neighbours, and with the Russians. The number of fixed Koriacs scarcely exceeds, at present, 900; and though it is not easy to calculate that of the wandering Koriacs, it is imagined that they do not much surpass this amount. Their regular occupation is hunting and fishing; but every season will not permit them to follow it. During these intervals, shut up in their profound habitations, they sleep, smoke, and get drunk. Thoughtless of the future, without regret for the past, past, they come not out of their yurts till the most urgent necessity compels them. These yurts are larger than those of the northern Kamtschadales, but are distributed nearly in the same manner, and are hardly more clean or comfortable, as they have not a vent-hole, or chimney, for the emission of the smoke. Like the Kamtschadales, they live upon dried fish, and the flesh and fat of the whale and sea-wolf. The whale is commonly eaten raw, and the sea-wolf dried and cooked in the same manner as their fish, except the sinews, the marrow, the brain, and, now and then, a slice of the flesh, which they devour raw with extreme avidity. Rein-deer is their favourite dish. Vegetables also form a part of their food: they gather in autumn various sorts of berries, of a part of which they make themselves a refreshing beverage, and the rest is bruised to powder, and kneaded with the oil of the whale or sea-wolf. Their passion for strong liquors, increased by the dearth of brandy, and the difficulty of procuring it, has led them to invent a drink equally potent, which they extract from a red mushroom, known in Russia as a strong poison, by the name of Moukhamorr. They put it in a vessel with certain fruits, and it has scarcely time to clarify, when their friends are invited to partake of it. The entertainment lasts for one, two, or three days, till the beverage is exhausted. Frequently, that they may not fail of being intoxicated, they eat the raw mushroom at the same time. The wandering Koriacs have the same characteristic outlines as the Kamtschadales. Among the women, particularly, there are very few who have not sunk eyes, flat noses, and prominent cheeks. The men are almost entirely beardless, and have short hair. The women carry their children in a kind of nest, or basket, arched over, in which the infant is placed, in a sitting posture, and sheltered from the weather. The Koriacs acknowledge a Supreme Being, the Creator of all things, and imagine that the sun is his throne, or palace. They address no prayer to him; goodness, they say, is his essence; all the good that exists in the world proceeds from him; and it is impossible that he should do an injury. The principle of evil they consider as a malignant spirit, and, to appease his wrath, offer up, as expiatory sacrifices, various animals newly born; as rein-deer and dogs, also the first fruits of their hunting and fishing, and whatever they possess that is most valuable.

KRUMLOW, a town of Prachalitz, in Bohemia.

KUBESHA, a large town of Asia, in the country of the Lerguis, one of the 7 Caucasian nations, between the Black Sea and the Caspian. Colonel Gaeber, who wrote an account of these countries in 1728, gives the following description of this very curious place: "Kubesha is a large, strong town, situated on a hill, between high mountains. Its inhabitants call themselves Franki (Franks, a name common in the east to all Europeans) and relate, late, that their ancestors were brought hither by some accident; the particulars of which are now forgotten. The common conjecture is, that they were cast away upon the coast; but those who pretend to be better versed in their history, give the following account: The Greeks and the Genoese carried on, during several centuries, a considerable trade, not only on the Black Sea, but on the Caspian, and were certainly acquainted with the mines contained in these mountains, from which they drew, by their trade with the inhabitants, great quantities of silver, copper, and other metals. In order to work these upon the spot, they sent hither a number of workmen, to establish manufactures, and instruct the inhabitants. The subsequent invasions of the Arabs, Turks, and Monguls, during which the mines were filled up, and the manufactures abandoned, prevented the strangers from effecting their return; so that they continued here, and erected themselves into a republic. They are still excellent artists, and make very good fire-arms, fabres, coats of mail, and several articles in gold and silver, for exportation. They have likewise, for their own defence, small copper cannon, of three pounds calibre, cast by themselves. They coin Turkish and Persian silver money, and even rubles, which readily pass current, because they are of the full weight and value. In their valleys, they have pasture and arable land, as well as gardens; but they purchase the greater part of their corn, trusting chiefly for their support to the sale of their manufactures, which are much admired in Turkey, Persia, and the Crimea. They are generally in easy circumstances, and are a quiet, inoffensive people, but high-spirited and independent. Their town is considered as a neutral spot, where the neighbouring princes can deposit their treasures with safety. They elect yearly twelve magistrates, to whom they pay the most unlimited obedience; and, as all the inhabitants are on a footing of the most perfect equality, each individual is sure to have, in his turn, a share in the government. In the year 1725, their magistrates, as well as the Usniel, or Khan of the Caissaks, acknowledged the sovereignty of Russia, but without paying any tribute.

KUFSTEIN, a small town of Tirol, with a castle built on a stupendous rock. It is situated on the Inn.

Kunbridge, Dorset. S. of Wareham.

KURILES, a chain of islands, extending from the southern extremity of Kamtschatka to Japan, chiefly valuable for their furs, particularly that of the sea-otter. The inhabitants of the neighbourhood of Lopatka, who were themselves called Kuriles, gave these islands the same name, as soon as they became acquainted with them. They are 22 in number, exclusive of the very small ones. The northernmost island, which is called Shoomska, and the next, which is named Paramonsic, were first visited by the Russians in 1713, and, at the same time, brought under their dominion. The others, in order, are at present made tributary, down to Ooshesheer inclusive. Ooshesheer is the southernmost island that the Russians have yet brought under their dominion, but they trade to Oorooop, which is the 18th. A group of islands lies to the SW. which the Japanese call Jeso; a name which they also give to the whole chain of islands between Kamtschatka and Japan. The southernmost, called Matmai, hath been long subject to the Japanese, and is fortified and garrisoned on the side toward the continent.

KURSKOI, a government of the Russian empire, formerly part of that of Bielgorod. It is bounded by Orel on the N. and Vornetz on the E. Its capital, Kursk, is seated on the Sem, 240 miles S. of Moscow.

LABOURD, a tract of France, on the Bay of Biscay, which made part of Basques. Bayonne was the capital. It abounds in fruit, and is now included in the department of Lower Pyrenees.

LABRADOR, an extensive country to the E. of Hudson's Bay, in N. America. The climate, even about Hay's River, in only lat. 57 N. is excessively cold during winter. The snows begin to fall in October, and continue falling, by intervals, the whole winter; and, when the frost is most vigorous, in form of the finest sand. The ice on the rivers is then 8 feet thick; port wine freezes in a solid mass; brandy coagulates; and the very breath falls on the blankets of a bed in the form of a hoar frost. The sun rises in the shortest day at five minutes past nine, and sets five minutes before three. In the longest, it rises at three, and sets about nine. The ice begins to disappear in May, and hot weather commences about the middle of June, which, at times, is so violent, as to scorch the faces of the hunters. Thunder is not frequent, but sometimes violent. But there must necessarily be a great difference of heat and cold in this vast extent, which reaches from lat. 50. 40. to lat. 62. N. Mock suns and halos are not unfrequent; they are very bright, and richly tinged with all the colours of the rainbow. The sun rises and sets with a large cone of yellowish light. The night is enlivened by the aurora borealis, which spreads a variety of different lights and colours over the whole concave of the sky, not to be eclipsed even by the splendor of the full moon, and the stars of a fiery redness. The animals in these countries are, the moose deer, stags, rein-deers, bears, tigers, buffaloes, wolves, foxes, beavers, otters, lynxes, martins, squirrels; ermines, wild cats, and hares. The feathered kinds are geese, bustards, ducks, partridges, and all kinds of wild fowl. Their fish are whales, morse, seals, codfish, and a white fish preferable to herrings; and, in their rivers and fresh waters, pike, perch, carp, and trout. All the quadrupeds in these countries are clothed with a close, soft, warm fur; and even the dogs and cats from Britain, that have been carried into Hudson's Bay, on the approach of winter, have changed their appearance, and acquired a much longer, softer, thicker coat of hair than they originally had. In summer there is here, as in other places, a variety in the colour of the several animals; when that season is over, which holds only for three months, they all assume the livery of winter, and every sort of beasts, and most of their fowls, are of the colour of the snow: every thing animate and inanimate is white. The soil, in the parts that are known, is mountainous and poor, affording only coarse plants, which are well adapted to the support and nourishment of deer and goats, but do not appear proper for horses, kine, or sheep: and all the E. coast exhibits a most barren and iron-bound appearance. The coasts, in general, abound, however, with large, convenient, and safe harbours; and, in the bays, are thousands of islands, wherein innumerable multitudes of eider ducks, and other water-fowl breed. The climate is remarkably healthy, and few parts of the world produce better furs. There are several Moravian settlements on the E. coast, the principal of which is Nain.

Labrun, Yorkshire, N. of Midlam.

LACCADIVE ISLANDS, a group of small islands in the Indian Ocean, the nearest of which is about 120 miles from the coast of Malabar. They are but little known. Lat. 10. to 12. 40. N. lon. 71. 15. to 73. 30. E.

Ladford, Devonshire, in Shebbear parish. Ladle Hill, Hants, near Sidmanton. Ladock, Cornwall, NE. of Truro.

LADOGA, a lake in Russia, situated between the Gulf of Finland, and the Lake of Onega. It is about 100 miles long, and from 50 to 60 broad, and is the largest lake in Europe. Among the fish, with which it abounds, are seals. It is full of quicksands, which, being moved from place to place, by the frequent storms to which it is subject, cause several shelves along it's course, on which the flat-bottomed vessels of the Russians are sometimes wrecked. This induced Peter I. to cause a canal to be cut from the SW. extremity of this lake to the river Neva, by which it has a communication with the Gulf of Finland. It was begun in 1718, and finished in 1732; and is 67 miles long, and 70 feet broad.

LADOGA, NEW, a town in the government of St Petersburg, situated on the S. coast of the Lake of Ladoga, 56 miles E. of St Petersburg.

LAGOON ISLAND, in the S. Pacific Ocean, discovered by Capt. Cook, in 1769. A lagoon occupies the middle and much the larger part of it. The whole island, being disjoined by reefs, it looks like a number of islands joined together. It is covered with wood, and trees of different verdure, cocoa nut, palm-trees, &c. Lat. 18. 47. S. lon. 139. 28. W.

LAGOS, a sea-port of Portugal, in Algarve, where the English fleets, bound to the Straits, usually take in fresh water. Near this town is Cape Lagos, 120 miles S. of Lisbon. Lat. 37. 2. N. lon. 8. 33. W.

LAGUNA, or CHRISTOBAL DE LA LAGUNA, (so named from a lake, a little to the E. of the town, now only an inconsiderable piece of water) a handsome town of the Island of Teneriffe, one of the Canaries, containing 2 parish churches, several convents, and an hospital. The streets are large and handsome. The governor has a palace here, but generally resides at Santa Cruz. It is well supplied with water, and is situated on a small eminence, every day refreshed with cooling breezes, in lat. 28. 28. N. and lon. 16. 28. W.

LAGUNA, a town of Venezuela, in Terra Firma, on the W. side of Lake Maracaybo.

LAGUNES OF VENICE, are marshes, or lakes, in Italy, on which Venice is seated, and which communicate with the sea. There are about 60 islands in these Lagunes. Eurano is the most considerable, next to those on which the city of Venice stands.

LAHAB, a town of Austria, 26 miles N. of Vienna.

LAHOLM, a sea-port of Sweden, in Halland, 12 miles SSE. of Halmstadt.

LAHORE, the capital of a province of the same name, in Hindoostan Proper, and in the Panjab, or Country of the Five Rivers, or five eastern branches of the Indus. It is a place of high antiquity, and was the residence of the Mahometan conquerors of Hindoostan, before they had established themselves in the central parts of the country. It owed its modern improvements, however, to Humaioon, the father of Achar, who made it his residence, during a part of his troublesome reign. Thevenot says that, including the suburbs, it was 3 leagues in length at that period; and when he saw it, in 1665, the city itself was above a league in extent. Ice is brought from the northern mountains to Lahore, and sold there all the year. The famous avenue of stately trees, so much spoken of by the early Indian travellers, began at Lahore, and extended to Agra, near 500 English miles. Lahore is now the capital of the Seiks, a new power, whose name, even as a sect, was hardly known till the rapid decline of the Mogul's empire, in the present century. Here they have extensive manufactures of cotton cloths, and stuffs of all kinds, and they make very curious carpets. It is situated on the S. bank of the Rauvee, 280 miles N. by W. of Delhi, and 420 E. of Candahar. Lat. 31. 15. N. lon. 72. 48. E.

LAHORE, a province in Hindoostan Proper, oftener called Panjab, and bounded on the W. by Cabul and Candahar, on the N. by Cachemire, on the E. and SE. by Sirinagur and Delhi, and on the S. by Moultan. It is near 300 miles in length from E. to W. and about 100 miles from N. to S. The soil is remarkably fertile, abounding in rice, corn, vines, sugars, cotton, wool, and fruits of every kind. In the tract between the Indus and the Behat are salt-springs, wonderfully productive, and affording fragments of rock salt, hard enough to be formed into vessels, &c.

LAMMERMUIR, a mountainous ridge in Scotland, which divides the county of Berwick from that of Haddington for above 20 miles. The mountains are, in general, covered with heath, and afford but scanty pasture for the sheep that feed on them.

Lammoram, Cornw. SW. of Tregony.

LAMO, an island and sea port of Africa, on the coast of Zanguebar, in lat. 2. o. S. and lon. 40. 24. E. The king and government, being Mahometans, are frequently at war with the rest of the inhabitants, who are Pagans. In 1589, the king of this island was beheaded by the Portuguese. His crime, whether real or pretended, was his having basely betrayed the governor of the coast. For this he was seized, with four of his Mahometan subjects, in his own capital, and carried to Pate, where they were publicly executed, in the presence of the king of that island, and of several petty kings of the neighbouring islands; ever since which, Lamo has been tributary to the Portuguese.

Lamonby, Cumberland, NW. of Penrith. Lamorney Point, Cornwall, W. of Mount's Bay.

LAMPEDOSA, an uninhabited, but pleasant and fertile, island, on the coast of Tunis, about 12 miles in circumference, with a good harbour, well supplied with fresh water, where ships touch at. It contains a building, divided into a church and a mosque, which is visited by both Catholics and Mahometans. Near it is a magazine, well provided, where vessels may find necessaries, for which they deposit the value, in a chest, if money, and in the church, if goods. On certain days, some Sicilian monks come to collect the deposits, and bring other stores. The profits are applied to the benefit of the hospital at Trapani. Lat. 36. 10. N. lon. 11. o. E.

LANCASHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the W. by the Irish Sea, on the N. by Cumberland and Westmorland, on the E. by Yorkshire, and on the S. by Cheshire. It is 74 miles from north to south (including a detached hundred on the northwest, called Furness, which is separated from the rest by a creek, at the head of Morecambe Bay) and from 15 to 44 in it's greatest breadth. It is divided into 6 hundreds, which contain 26 market towns, 62 parishes, 894 villages, about 43,000 houses, and 260,000 inhabitants. The air, in general, is very healthful, the inhabitants living to a great age. This county comprises a variety of soil and face of country; but, upon the whole, it is one of those which are the least favoured as to natural advantages, a proof of which is the ancient thinness of it's population; shown by the very small number of parishes into which it is divided. The hundred of Furness is a wild and rugged region, stored with quantities of iron ore and slate, and covered with a growth of underwood, which is cut in succession, and made into charcoal for the use of the iron furnaces. The eastern part of the county between the Ribble and the Mersey, comprising the ancient forests of Wyresdale and Bowland, is mountainous and generally barren; but the southern part of the tract between these two rivers is flat, quite from the sea to the commencement of the ridge called Blackstone-edge, that separates the county from Yorkshire. Much of this is a fertile country, though occasionally deformed by the black turf bogs, here called mosses: some of which are of large extent, and absolutely impassable in wet seasons. In the north-east part of this division are some lofty hills, the most noted of which is Pendle Hill. The remaining part is varied with hill, dale, and moor. The natural products of this country are of little consequence, except the coal and turf with which it's southern parts abound. Of the former is a species, called cannel, far exceeding all other, not only in making a clear fire, but for being capable of being manufactured into candlesticks, cups, standishes, snuff-boxes, &c. and of being polished, so as to represent a beautiful black marble. Lancashire is little adapted for a corn country, not only, in many parts, from the nature of it's soil, but from the remarkable wetness of it's climate; the land, however, is singularly fitted to the growth of the potatoe. All the rivers afford salmon; and the Mersey is visited by annual shoals of smelts, here called sparlings, of remarkable size and flavour. As a commercial and manufacturing county, Lancashire is distinguished beyond most others in the kingdom. It's principal manufactures are linen, silk, and cotton goods; fustians, counterpanes, shalloons, bays, serges, tapes, small wares, hats, sail-cloth, sack-ing, pins, iron goods, cast plate glass, &c. Of the commerce of this county, it may suffice to observe, that Liverpool is the third, if not the second, port in the kingdom. The principal rivers are the Mersey, Irwell, Ribble, Lune, Leven, Wyre, Hodder, Roche, Duddon, Winster, Ken, and Calder, and it has two considerable lakes, Winander Mere and Coniston Water. Lancaster is the county town.

*LANCASTER, the county town of Lancashire, is an ancient, well built, and rapidly improving town, containing about 1160 houses, and 1600 families. On the summit of a hill stands the castle, which is not ancient, but large and strong, and now serves both as the shire-house and the county-goal. On the top of this castle is a square tower, called John of Gaunt's Chair, where there is a fine prospect of the mountains of Cumberland, and of the course of the Lune; the view toward the sea, extending to the Isle of Man. The town hall is a handsome structure. Lancaster carries on a considerable trade, especially to the West Indies, America, and the Baltic. The exports are hardware, woollen goods, candles, and cabinet work, for the making which last it is noted; and it has also a manufacture of sail-cloth. It is seated on the river Lune, which here forms a port for vessels of moderate size, and over which it has a new stone bridge of 5 elliptical arches, 66 miles S. of Carlisle, and 235 NNW. of London. Lat. 54. 4. N. lon. 2. 56. W. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday, and one on every other Wednesday for cattle.

LANCASTER, the county town of a county of the same name, in Pennsylvania. It's trade is large, and daily increasing. It contains an elegant court-house, and a college, founded in 1787, named Franklin LANDEN, a town of Autrian Brabant, where the allies, under King William and the Elector of Bavaria, were defeated by the Duke of Luxemburg, July 29, 1693. The French, were repulsed two or three times, and lost a great many officers and men, but returning to the charge, they gained a victory, which, however, cost them dear, having 15,000 killed, and between 9 and 10,000 wounded. The confederates lost 60 pieces of cannon, 9 mortars, &c. with several standards, colours, and about 7000 men killed and wounded. The French army amounted to 80,000 men, and that of the allies to less than one-third of that number. It is seated on the river Beck, 17 miles NW. of Huy.

LANDERNEAU, a town in the dept. of Finisterre, seated on the river Elliorn, 16 miles NE. of Brest.

LANDES, a department of France, a part of what was heretofore called Landes, and and includes Marfan, in Gascony; bounded on the N. by the dept. of the Gironde, and on the S. by the Lower Pyrenees. It takes its name from a district called Landes, extending along the coast of the Bay of Biscay. This is a barren, sandy, country, covered with fern, pines, and the holm tree; of the bark of which corks are made. The soil, however, is improved by manuring it with marl, and sowing it with rye. It is thinly peopled. Mont de Marfan and Dax are the principal towns.

Landew, Cornwall, S. of Launceston. Landewenake, Cornw. near the Lizard Point. Landford, Dorset. 1 mile from Grimston. Landgreat, Linc. has a ferry over the Witham. Landguard Fort, in the limits of Essex, though on the Suffolk side of the harbour of Harwich. Landbouse, York. LANJAN, a city of Asia, capital of the kingdom of Laos, or, at least, of the southern division. It is the usual residence of the king, whose palace appears like a city, from it's vast extent, and the number of people who inhabit it. The houses of the grandees are very high and elegant, well contrived and ornamented, but those of inferior condition are no better than huts. The priests alone have the privilege of building, their houses and convents, with brick or stone. It is situated on the W. side of the river Mecon, in lat. 18. 30. N. lon. 101. 15. E.

LANNION, a town in the dept. of the North Coast, 15 miles W. of Treguier. It's trade consists in wine and hemp, and it has some mineral waters. The inhabitants of Lannion, Guincamp, and the environs, speak the Celtic, or Welch language, which is said to have been brought hither by the Britons, who took refuge in these parts, in the fifth century.

Lankey, Devonf. near Barnstaple. Lan-liver, Cornw. near Lestwithiel. Lan Maris, Glouc. in Winrush parish. Lanno, Cornwall, near Michelstow, LANSINBURGH, formerly called NEW CITY, a flourishing town of N. America. in the state of New York. It stands on the E. side of Hudson's River, opposite the S. branch of Mohawk's River, 9 miles N. of Albany.

Lanteglass, Cornw. near Fowey. Lanteglass, Cornw. NW. of Camelford. Lanterden, Shropf. near Munslow, at, or near, the conflux of the rivers Temd and Colun.

In the neighbourhood is a perfect Roman camp, called Brandon; and a British camp, called Coxall. Lanthony, near Gloucester, has some ruins of a priory, now converted into a farm-house, and very extensive offices, situated in a deep, solitary valley, encompassed with rocks, which almost exclude the mid-day sun. It was built by St. David, who lived a hermit here, in the reign of Henry I. Lanton, Westm. near Appleby. Lantwitt, Glamorganf. Lantony Monastery, Monm. in the northernmost corner of the county, situated in a low vale, inclosed on all sides with high mountains. It was built in the year 1108. The nave is still remaining, from E. to W. the roof excepted. Lanwichangel, and Lanwinio, both in Carmarthenf.

LANZO, a small town of Piedmont, situated on the Stura, 11 miles NW. of Turin.

LAON, a considerable town in the dept. of Aisne, containing about 8000 inhabitants. It's principal trade consists in corn and wine, and it is noted for excellent artichokes. It is seated on a mountain, 77 miles NE. of Paris.

LAOS, a kingdom of Asia, bounded on the W. by Siam and Ava, on the N. by China, on the E. by Tonquin and Cochin China, and on the S. by Cambodia. The whole region is crossed, from N. to S. by one large river, called the Mecon, into which descend an infinite number of rivulets, that render the soil very fruitful; assisted by canals. This country is generally flat, surrounded on all sides by mountains, covered with forests, which serve as barriers against their potent enemies; it abounds in rice, fruits, corn, and fish. The drugs called benfamen and lak are found in this kingdom. The inhabitants are robust, of an olive complexion, and mild. Their principal occupation is tilling the ground and fishing. The king is absolute, and has no other law than his own will; and shows himself but twice in a year. He has a large revenue from elephants' teeth found in his dominions. Their religion is much the same as that which prevails in all the countries of Farther India. Some writers make a distinction between the southern part, which they call Lanjan, and the northern, which they call Laos, or Lao. Lanjan is the capital.

Lapford, Devonf. SE. of Chumleigh.

LAPHAO, a town of the Island of Timor, in the Eastern Indian Ocean, inhabited by descendants of the Portuguese, of a copper colour, with black hair. It contains a church, and about 60 houses, and is situated at the bottom of a bay, on the N. coast.

N. coast, with a harbour, and some trade with Goa and Batavia.

LAPLAND, a large country in the N. of Europe, subject to Sweden. It is bounded on the N. by the Frozen Ocean; on the E. by the White Sea; on the S. by Sweden and Bothnia; and on the W. by Norway, being computed to be 450 miles in length, and 300 in breadth. The country chiefly consists of rocks, mountains, deserts, forests, heaths, fens, and lakes, so that it makes but an uncouth and very disagreeable appearance, and is very thinly inhabited, in proportion to it's extent, yet abounds in a great variety of birds, beasts, and fishes. The furs and skins of beavers, otters, black, red, and white foxes, &c. are their chief articles of trade, and they are enabled to sell a considerable quantity to their neighbours. The Laplanders are of middling stature, have generally a flattish face, fallen cheeks, dark grey eyes, thin beard, brown hair, are stout, straight, and of a yellowish complexion, occasioned by the weather, the smoke of their habitations, &c. Their manner of life renders them hardy, agile, and supple; but, at the same time, they are much inclined to indolence. They are peaceable, not given to theft, nor squire; and so proud of their country and constitution, that, when removed from the place of their nativity, they usually die, it is said, of the nostalgia, or longing to return. The language of the Laplanders comprehends so many dialects, that it is with difficulty they understand each other. They preserve their pastoral manners, so that agriculture prospers not much among them. They are divided into Fishers and Mountaineers. The former make their habitations in the neighbourhood of some lake, whence they draw their subsistence. The others seek their support upon the mountains, possessing herds of rein-deer, which they use according to the season, but they go generally on foot. They are very industrious herdsmen, and are rich in comparison of the Fishers, some of them possessing six hundred or a thousand rein-deer. The castrated rein-deer are alert, tame, large, strong, and handsome; on which account they use them for draught, and hold them in such estimation, that it is a compliment among them to call each other a gelt rein-deer. The Lapland fishers, who are also called Laplanders of the woods, because in summer they dwell upon the borders of the lakes, and in winter in the forests, live by fishing and hunting, and chuse their situation from it's convenience for either. The introduction of fire-arms has almost entirely abolished the use of the bow and arrow. With respect to the larger animals, such as wild rein-deer, wolves, &c. they most frequently knock them down with clubs, as it is easy to come up with them by their snow-shoes, which are very long, and prevent them from sinking into the snow: bears they generally shoot, and finish them with spears. Besides looking after their rein-deer, the fishery, and the chase, the men employ themselves in the construction of their canoes, which are little, light, and compact. They also make sledges, to which they give the form of a canoe; harnesses for the rein-deer; all sorts of utensils in wood, such as cups, bowls, &c. which are sometimes prettily carved, sometimes ornamented with bones, brass, or horn; it is the man's business, likewise, to look after the kitchen. The employment of the women consists in making nets for the fishery, drying fish and meat, milking the rein-deer, making cheese, and tanning hides. They prepare the nerves of the rein-deer in such a manner as to make them serve for thread; and draw brass wire by the help of the horns of the rein-deer pierced, instead of a drawing-iron. They embroider their clothes with brass wire, silver, sham gold, or wool, which they have the art of dying in all sorts of colours. These people live in huts in the form of tents, covered with briars, bark, linen, turf, coarse cloth, felt, or rein-deer skins; and the door is of felt, made like two curtains, which open asunder. They are not able to stand upright in these huts, but sit upon their heels round the fire. At night they lie down and cover themselves with their clothes, and in winter put their feet into a fur-bag, separating their apartments with deer-skins. Their household furniture consists of iron or copper kettles, wooden cups, bowls, spoons, and sometimes tin, or even silver basons: to these may be added their implements of fishing and hunting. In their dress they use no linen. The men wear close breeches, reaching down to their shoes, which are made of untanned skin, pointed, and turned up before; and in winter they put a little hay in them. Their doublet is made to fit their shape, and open at the breast; over this they wear a close coat, the skirts of which reach down to the knees, and it is fastened round them by a leathern girdle, ornamented with plates of tin or brass. To this girdle they tie their knives, their instruments for getting fire, and their smoking apparatus. Their clothes are made of fur, leather, or cloth; always always bordered with fur, or cloth of different colours. Their caps are edged with fur, pointed at top, and the four seams adorned with lists of a different colour. The Russian Laplanders generally border their caps with rat-skins. The dress of the women very much resembles that of the men; but their girdle is commonly embroidered with brass wire. Beside these, they wear kerchiefs, and little aprons, made of Russian painted cloth, rings on their fingers, and ear-rings, to which they sometimes hang chains of silver, which pass two or three times round the neck. They sometimes wear caps folded after the manner of turbans, and sometimes caps to the shape of the head; but all are ornamented with the embroidery of brass wire, or with list of different colours. The rein-deer supply the Laplanders with the greatest part of their provisions; the chase and the fishery furnish the rest; but the flesh of the bear is their most delicate meat. They eat every kind of fish, even the sea-dog; as well as all sorts of wild animals, not excepting birds of prey and carnivorous animals. Their winter provisions consist of flesh and fish, both of which they eat raw. They put the milk of the rein-deer into the stomachs of that animal, and so let it freeze; and when they want to use their frozen milk, they chop off pieces with a hatchet. The seasoning of their food is the fat of sea-dogs and salt, if they can get it. They make soups of a sort of cheese, which is so fat, that it takes fire on applying a candle. Their common drink is water, sometimes mixed with milk; brandy is scarce with them; but they are very fond of it. Their most considerable traffic is with the Norwegians. Formerly this trade was carried on in the way of barter; but coin is now current among them. The balance is always in favour of the Laplanders; because they can furnish more merchandize in skins and furs, than they buy flour, cloth, and hardware goods. Their weddings are kept at the bride's house, who is dressed in her best manner, and appears with her head quite uncovered, which, at other times, is never the custom, with either women or maidens; the feast is a kind of club mess, to which each of the guests brings meat and drink. Their diversion at weddings, and other merry-makings, is the game of fox and geese; they wrestle, and jump over a stick, and are fond of giving grotesque accounts or exhibitions of different adventures. They likewise dance and sing, or howl in disagreeable measures. The new-married people live with the woman's relations for the first year; at the end of which they retire to their own hut. The Laplanders bury their dead in coffins; in some cantons with their clothes on, in others quite naked. Their religion is a compound of Christian and Pagan ceremonies; yet all are baptized, and call themselves by the names of Christians. The Lapps, in general, acknowledge the king of Sweden for their sovereign, and apply to the Swedish courts of judicature, all over Lapland; yet, at certain seasons, some of them pay tribute to Denmark or Russia, when they pitch their tents within the dominions of those crowns. Lapland is divided into 7 provinces, or lapmarks, which derive their name from the places of note in Nordland, in whose neighbourhood they lie, viz. Jamtland, Asele, Umea, Pitea, Lulea, Tornea, and Kiemi. There are no towns, however, in any of the lapmarks.

Lapley, Staff. SW. of Penkridge. Lapside, Devonf. near Hemlock. Lapworth, Warwickshire, E. of Umberslade.

LAR, a town of Persia, capital of the province of Laristan. It has a considerable manufacture of silk; and it's territory abounds in oranges, dates, and very large tamarinds. At the foot of a mountain, near the city, is found the substance called mummy. Lat. 27. 30. N. lon. 52. 45. E.

LAR, a river of Asia, in the country of Cachemire, which runs into the Behat, about 10 miles NW. of Cachemire.

LARACHA, a town of Fez, seated at the mouth of the river Luccos, with a harbour, or river of good depth; insecure in winter, when the wind blows from the W. and SW. but safe from the beginning of April to the end of September. The large vessels of the emperor usually winter here. It is 33 miles S. of Tangiers. Lat. 35. 40. N. lon. 6. 48. W.

Larbrick, Lanc. near Preston: it has a chalybeate spring, the water of which is extremely cold, and upon holding a finger, or hand, in it, the part immersed grows immediately red, and feels excessively painful. Fish, of several sorts, that have been put into it, expired instantly, after one convulsive effort.

LAREDO, a sea-port and bay of Biscay, in Spain; with a good harbour. It is 30 miles W. of Bilbao.

near Wigton. Lasbam, Hants, NW. of Alton. Lasbbrook, Oxf. on the Thames, between Sunning and Henley. Lasbkel, a river in Derbyshire.

LASSA, or LAHASSA, otherwise called BARONTHALA, and in D'Anvilles chart of Thibet, TONKER, is the capital of the country of Great Thibet, in Asia. It is not a large city, but the houses are of stone, and are spacious and lofty. About seven miles on the E. side of the city, is the mountain of Putala, which contains on it's summit the palace of the grand lama, the high priest and sovereign of Thibet. Lassa is 24 miles NE. of the crossing place of the river Sanpoo, which is seven miles from the foot of Mount Kambala, and it is 250 miles NE. of Patna. Lat. 30. 34. N. lon. 91. 40. E.

Lassington, near Gloucester. Lastock, Dorsetf. 3 miles SW. of Abbot's Stock. Lastock, or Loftock, Lancashire, SW. of Bolton.

LATAKIA, an ancient and considerable town of Syria, built by Seleucus Nicanor, who called it LAODICEA, from the name of his mother. It carries on a considerable commerce, chiefly in tobacco, upwards of 20 cargoes of which are annually sent to Damietta, in exchange for rice. It's harbour, like all the others on this coast, is a sort of basin environed by a mole, the entrance of which is very narrow. The Turks have suffered it to be nearly choked up. The remains of antiquity show it to have been a place of considerable extent. It is 80 miles SW. of Aleppo.

Latched, Devonf. in Whitstone parish. Latchford, Oxf. in Great Haseley parish. Lateridge, Glouc. S. of Thornbury. Latham, Lancaf. near Ormskirk, and in the neighbourhood of coal-pits. In it's park is a chalybeate water, or spa, called Maudlin's Well, which has wrought many remarkable cures. Though remote from the sea, or salt-water rivers, it used to cast up marine shells in large quantities, till millstones were laid upon the spring, to hinder the sand and shells from boiling up so high as formerly. Lathbury, Bucks, near Newport. Lathes, Cumb. NW. of Penrith. Lathesley, Surry, SW. of Guilford. Latholm, Yorkf. between Howden and Pocklington. Latimers, Bucks, near Chesham. Laton, Lanc. W. of Kirkham. Laton, E. and W. Yorkf. LOUGH SHY, in Mayo, Connaught.

LOUGH STRANGFORD, in Down, Ulster, takes it's present name from a small port town, called Strangford, seated on the W. side of the narrow entrance from the sea. It was formerly known by the name of Lough Cone, or Lough Coyne. It is a deep bay, or inlet of the sea, about 17 miles long and 4 or 5 broad, and abounds with excellent fish, particularly smelts; and, off the bar, there is a peredical herring fishery in autumn. It contains 54 islands, small and great, known by particular names, and there are many others which are nameless. Four of them are called Swan Islands, from the number of swans which frequent them. The great and profitable manufacture carried on in these islands, is the burning of sea-weed into kelp.

LOUGA SWILLY, in Louth, Leinster.

Loughon, Bucks, between Fenny and Stony Stratford. Loughon, Essex, 10 miles from London. Loughon, Linc. W. of Kirton, in Lindsey. Loughon, Linc. E. of Sleaford. Loughon, Devonshire, near Plympton. Lowick Bridge, Camb. near Cointon Water. Lowington, Hants, near Alresford. Lowington, Somers. between Bruton and Somerton.

LOUISA, at first called DEGERLEY, a sea-port of Nyland, built in 1745, as a frontier town towards Russia. The houses are all of wood, two stories high, and painted red. It is situated on a bay on the N. coast of the Gulf of Finland, and defended towards the sea by a small fortress.

LOUISEBTRGH, a town of N. America, capital of the Island of Cape Breton, subject to the English. It has an excellent harbour, about 6 miles in length, from NE. to SW. and more than half a mile in breadth, from NW. to SE. Its entrance is not above 1800 feet wide, and is formed by 2 small islands. In the NE. part is a fine, careening wharf, to heave down, very secure from all winds. On the opposite side are the fishing stages, with room for 2000 boats to cure their fish; the cod being remarkably plentiful here, and, at the same time, better than any about Newfoundland. The fishery may, in general, be continued from April to the close of December, when the harbour becomes impracticable, being entirely frozen, so as to be walked over. The town is about half an English mile in length, and 2 in circuit, built, for the most part, of stone houses, and laid out in broad and regular streets. At a little distance from the fort, or citadel, is a large parade, the inside of which is a fine square, near 200 feet every way. This island was taken by Admiral Boscawen and Lieutenant-general Amherst, June 27, 1758, and its fortifications since demolished. Lat. 45. 54. N. lon. 59. 48. W.

LOUISIANA, a large country of North America, situated on both sides of the Mississippi, and bounded on the E. by Florida and the United States; on the S. by the Gulf of Mexico; on the W. by New Mexico; and on the N. by Indian Nations. It is agreeably situated between the extremes of heat and cold; its climate varying as it extends towards the N. The southern parts, lying within the reach of the refreshing breezes from the sea, are not scorched like those under the same latitude in Africa; and its northern regions are colder than those in Europe under the same parallels, with a wholesome, serene air. From the favourableness of the climate, two annual crops of Indian corn, as well as rice, may be produced; and the soil, with little cultivation, would furnish grain of every kind in the greatest abundance. The timber is as fine as any in the world; and the quantities of live oak, ash, mulberry, walnut, cherry, cypress, and cedar, are astonishing. The neighbourhood of the Mississippi, besides, furnishes the richest fruits in great variety; the soil is particularly adapted for hemp, flax, and tobacco; and indigo is at this time a staple commodity, which commonly yields the planter three or four cuttings a year. Whatever is rich and rare in the most desirable climates in Europe seems to be the spontaneous production of this delightful country. It is intersected by a number of fine rivers, among which are the Natchitoches, and the Adayes, or Mexicano. In 1763, Louisiana was ceded to Spain.

LOUISVILLE, a town of N. America, in the state of Kentucky, and county of Jefferson. It is seated on the river Ohio, opposite Clarksville, at the Falls, in a fertile country, and promises to be a place of great trade; but its unhealthiness, owing to stagnated waters at the back of the town, has hitherto retarded its growth. It is 80 miles SW. of Lexington. Lat. 38. 3. N. lon. 86. 30. W.

Lound, East, Linc. in Axholm Isle. Lound Hall, Nott. N. of Retford, on the river Idle.

LOURDE, a town in the dept. of Upper Pyrenees, with an ancient castle, seated on a rock, 10 miles from Bagneres.

LOUTH, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinster, about 22 miles in length, and from 9 to 14 in breadth; bounded on the W. by Monaghan and Meath; on the N. by Armagh and Carlingford Bay; on the E. by St. George's Channel; and on the S. by Meath, from which it is parted by the river Boyne. It is is the smallest county in the kingdom, but very fertile and pleasant, and contains 61 parishes, 11,500 houses, and about 57,750 inhabitants. It's chief towns are Dundalk, Garlingford, Drogheda, Ardee, and Dunleer.

LOUTH, a town of Ireland, in the county of the same name, 6 miles SW. of Dundalk.

LOUTH, a large and considerable town of Lincolnshire, containing many handsome houses, and about 4000 inhabitants. It has a large church, with a fine steeple, thought by some to be as high as the spire at Grantham, which is 288 feet high. From hence there is a canal to the sea, at Tilney, about 8 miles. It is situated on the river Lud, from which it takes it's name, 28 miles NE. of Lincoln, and 148 N. of London. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.

Louthersdown, in Fermanagh, Ulster.

LOUVAIN, or LOEVEN, a large city of the late Austrian Brabant, with a celebrated university. The walls of this place are nearly 7 miles in circumference, but within them are a great many gardens and vineyards. The public buildings are magnificent, and the university consists of 60 small colleges, much admired for their situation and architecture, but not sumptuous. They formerly made large quantities of cloth here, inasmuch that this city contained, at one time, 150,000 clothiers; but at present their trade is greatly decayed, and the place is chiefly remarkable for it's good beer, with which it serves the neighbouring towns. In it's castle, built originally by the Emperor Arnulph, to defend the country against the Normans, and called at first Loven and afterwards Cæsar's Castle, the emperor, Charles V. and his sisters were brought up to the year 1510; and formerly the assembly of the states was held here. It is now in ruins. It is seated on the river Dyle, 12 miles NNE. of Brussels.

LOUVESTEIN, a fortress of S. Holland, situated on an island, called the Bommel Waert, formed by the junction of the rivers Waal and Maese, 6 miles SE. of Gorcum, and 16 E. of Dort. In this castle, the patriotic chiefs were imprisoned by Prince Maurice, whence that party has ever since been called the Louvestein party. Their principles are strongly republican, and, of course, in direct opposition to the stadtholder.

LOUVIERS, a handsome town in the dept. of Eure, with a considerable manufactory of fine cloths. It is seated in a fertile plain, on the river Eure, 10 miles N. of Evreux, and 55 NW. of Paris.

LUBAN, a town of Novogrodeck, in Lithuania.

LUBANSKEN SEA, or, the LAKE OF LUBAN, a lake in Livonia, toward the confines of Courland and Lithuania. It abounds with excellent fish.

LUBBECKE, or LUTHICKE, a town of Minden, in Westphalia, with some trade in yarn and linen; also in the breeding of cattle and brewing beer.

LUBBEN, a town and small circle of Lusatia, situated on the river Spree, 56 miles N. of Dresden. It contains four churches, with a noble hospital, and a land-house, or house where the diets assemble.

Lubbenham, Leicest. near Harborough.

LUBECK, a celebrated sea-port of Holstein, in Lower Saxony. It is a free, imperial city, and was long the head of the famous Hanseatic League, which was formed here in 1164. It was likewise the most commercial city and powerful republic of the north. Its fleet set the northern powers at defiance, and rode triumphant in the Baltic. But Lubec retains scarcely a shadow of its former power. Its trade, however, is still considerable, but will probably be still farther diminished, if the Canal of Kiel should answer the purpose for which it was planned; for, by that means, great part of the merchandise, which now passes through this town, will be conveyed along that canal, down the Eyder, to Tonningen, and thence by sea, and up the Elbe to Hamburg. The houses of Lubeck are built all of stone, in a very ancient style of architecture; the doors being so large as to admit carriages into the hall, which frequently serves for a coach house. The walls of many houses bear the date of the 15th century, and, at that period, no doubt, the town was esteemed very beautiful. The streets are, for the most part, steep, as the city stands on the two sides of a large hill, the eastern part extending towards the Wackenitz, as the western does towards the Trave.—

Here are 4 parochial churches, besides the cathedral. The town-house is a superb structure, and has several towers. In it is a large hall, called Haanssaal, where the deputies of the Hanse Towns used formerly to meet. Here is also a fine exchange, built in the year 1683. The inhabitants are all Lutherans, and there are 21 preachers, whose chief has the title of Superintendent. Here were formerly 4 convents; and in that of St. John there are still 22 Protestant girls, under the government of an abbess. That of St. Mary Magdalen is turned into an hospital; that of St. Anne is made a house of correction; and of the monastery of St. Catharine, they have made a handsome college. In the great hospital, there is always a considerable number of poor men and women. Beside this, there are 14 other hospitals, 1 for lunatics, a pest-house, and 4 others for sick persons. Lubec is seated at the confluence of the rivers Trave, (which is the largest), the Steckenitz, another navigable stream, by which it communicates with the Elbe; and the Wackenitz, which issues from the Lake of Ratzeburg, and, after joining the Sewartau, falls into the Baltic, by means of which several streams, long and flat-bottomed vessels pass from the Baltic into the German Ocean, 14 miles SW. of the Baltic, and 40 NE. of Hamburg, Lat. 53. 52. N. lon. 10. 44. E.

LUBECK, THE BISHOPRICK OF, a small territory in that part of the duchy of Holstein, which was anciently called Wagria. The bishop, who is always of the house of Holstein, is a prince of the empire, yet, in the college of princes, he sits neither on the spiritual nor temporal bench, but on a particular one, placed crosswise, and laid there purposely for him and the bishop of Osnaburg, when a Lutheran. The chapter consists of 30 persons, who are all Lutherans, 4 Roman Catholics excepted. The cathedral stands in Lubec, where, however, it has no authority.

LUBEC, an island in the Eastern Indian Ocean, near Madura. Lat. 5. 50. S. lon. 112. 22. E.

LUBEN, a town of Lignitz, in Silesia.

LUBLIN, a city of Poland, capital of a palatinate of the same name, part of which is annexed to the new kingdom of Galicia. It contains several churches and convents, has three annual fairs, which last a month each, and are frequented by great numbers of German, Greek, Armenian, Turkish, Russian, Jewish, and even Arabian merchants, and is situated in a very pleasant and fertile country, on the little river Bystranza, with a castle built on a high rock, 85 miles SE. of Warsaw.

LUBOMLA, a town of Chelm, in Poland.

LUCCA, a town of Italy, capital of a republic of the same name. It is about 3 Italian miles in circumference, and fortified with 11 bastions. The inhabitants, who are above 40,000, are considerable manufacturers of silk, and gold and silver stuffs; for this reason it is called Lucca the Industrious. They oblige all travellers who have arms to leave them at the city gate, and will not suffer any one to wear a sword within it. The state palace is a large building, and includes the arsenal, which has arms for 20,000 men. The houses are handsome, and the streets broad and well paved, but most of them are irregular. It is seated in the middle of a fruitful plain, terminating in pleasant eminences, near the river Serchio, 10 miles NNE. of Pisa, 37 W. of Florence, and 155 N. by W. of Rome. Lat. 43. 50. N. long. 10. 35. E.
